FROM: ROBERT S. ADLER Robert Adler
SUBJECT: MEMO TO FILE REGARDING COMMUNICATIONS UNDER 16
C.F.R. PART 1025.68
DATE: MARCH 4, 2014
CC: STEPHANIE TSACOUMIS, GENERAL COUNSEL

Pursuant to 16 C.F.R. part 1025.68(e)(1), I, Robert S. Adler, am formally¹ forwarding to the Secretary of the Consumer Product Safety Commission the attached communications that I received from Mr. Shihan Qu on Tuesday, February 18, 2014, while I attended the Toy Industry Association's (TIA) Toy Fair 2014 at the Javits Center in New York, NY.

Pursuant to 16 C.F.R. part 1025(e)(2)(ii), I am providing the following information regarding my brief conversation with Mr. Shihan Qu on Tuesday, February 18, 2014:

A. Title and docket number of proceedings:

In the Matter of Zen Magnets, LLC, CPSC Docket 12-2

B. Name and address of person making communication:

Shihan Qu, Founder
Zen Magnets LLC
PO Box 1744
Boulder, CO 80306

C. Date, time, duration, and circumstances of communication:

Mr. Qu approached me on Tuesday, February 18, 2014, mid-morning, after I finished speaking at the TIA's Toy Safety Seminar. We spoke for a few minutes.

D. Statement of matters discussed:

At first, Mr. Qu did not identify himself. He approached me and asked whether the Commission considers public opinion when taking action. I told him that we do consider public opinion along with a number of other factors when deciding whether to take regulatory or enforcement action. Mr. Qu said he wanted to give me a file folder of documents that he described as copies of petitions to the Commission regarding Zen Magnets. I told him that he should send the petitions in to the Commission's headquarters to be entered into the record. Mr. Qu replied that they had already been sent in and that these were copies, which were addressed to me. I responded that I would submit them to the Commission upon my return to the office.

¹ Upon my return from my trip to New York my staff turned over the attached communications to the Office of Secretary. Subsequently, I was advised by the Office of the General Counsel to submit the communications with a statement describing the circumstances upon which I received the communications.

E. Whether person persisted in continuing the communication:

After I told Mr. Qu that I would submit his communications to the Commission for the record, I told him that I was unable to continue our conversation. He did not persist in continuing the conversation.

Robert Adler, Kenneth Hinson, and Inez Tenenbaum

Greetings,

I'm writing to you to retract the administrative complaints against Zen Magnets and Maxfield & Oberton, and stop the retail stop-sale requests of magnet spheres in the US. These requests have nearly nearly destroyed the magnet sphere industry, impede the freedoms of all Americans, and endanger a beautiful medium of art.

A retail prohibition of magnet spheres is not the proper reaction to the misuse of high powered magnets. A broken product should be taken off the shelves, but magnet spheres are not defective, and do not need to be taken off the market. They just need to be out of the mouths of children.

Consumer safety is an important duty, and it is truly regrettable that despite product warnings, there have been dozens of injuries due to child ingestion out of the millions of magnet sphere sets sold in the past three years. However, just as is the case with firearms, swimming pools, and balloons, the solution to the safety problem is education and not prohibition or intimidation.

Federal regulation ASTM F963 clearly states that magnets must be labeled 8+ for strong magnetic science kits, and 14+ for strong magnetic toys. All magnet sphere manufacturers already comply with this regulation. The CPSC's assertion of hazard against the magnet sphere industry is also inconsistent with other existing dangers. For example, 100,000 trampoline injuries will require an ER visit in the United States, and 30 children a year drown in buckets.

I am calling for the public reversal of requests made by the CPSC to remove magnet spheres from the retail market. When it comes to product safety, every one of the links is responsible: companies, parents, children.

Sincerely,

National Survey Results

- Q1 The Consumer Product Safety Commission (or CPSC) is currently investigating sets of high-powered magnets typically used for art, education, and stress relief. The concern is that they are an ingestion hazard to children because magnets can pinch internally once two or more are swallowed, which may require surgery. If all legally required warnings are clearly labeled on the packaging, which of these levels of age restriction do you believe is appropriate for consumer high-powered magnet sets: do you think there should be no age restriction; should the magnets be limited to children 8 and over as currently required by federal regulation for science kits with high powered magnets; should the magnets be limited to children aged 16 and over, similar to motor vehicles; should the magnets be limited to persons aged 18 and over similar to tobacco; should the magnets be limited to persons aged 21 and over similar to alcohol, do you think the magnets should be completely banned and no one should

Coleman Jones	Woodstock, GA	2012-07-26	I am signing this petition because I feel the CPSC has lost its perspective. In this particular case, I feel parents and guardians should be responsible for keeping magnetic spheres out of children's hands, NOT a federal commission.
Brandon Taylor	Provo, UT	2012-07-27	This regulation is completely ridiculous. How these can be banned when they are marketed to adults and have sufficient warnings is beyond me. The number of incidents is so minute over that last 4 years compared to so many other products available. People need to act responsibly and be accountable for their actions or laziness that leads to children eating these magnets. They need to learn about the dangers just like there are with thousands of other products and heed the warnings. The CPSC might as well ban medicine, power tools, cleaning supplies, kitchen knives, guns, snowboards, pools, skates, scooters, bicycles, skateboards, balloons, cars...
Travis Bemrose	Columbia, MO	2012-07-27	CPSC's knee jerk reaction is out of perspective and out of touch. Ban the sale and distribution of baggy, off-the-ass "gangster" pants/shorts first. They are more of a problem to society.
Jeff Jamieson	Denver, CO	2012-07-27	These products should be kept away children, but not everyone else too. This is the responsibility of parents, not the US government.
Eric Sigurdson	Colorado Springs, CO	2012-07-27	This industry is my livelihood. Why destitute even more Americans? One can easily verify that child deaths per balloon sold vastly outpaces deaths per Nd magnet sphere sold.
Jeremy Brown	Tolleson, AZ	2012-07-27	Do not take away the rights of the many because of the neglect of the few.
David Tran	Toronto, Canada	2012-07-27	Owner of these magnets.
Kenneth Hampton	Whiteman AFB, MO	2012-07-27	I am an adult. I own Zen Magnets. I would not let small children play with them, nor would I be ignorant enough to swallow them myself. It is not the government's job to regulate my safety. I am sick of the big brother attitude and the wasted taxpayer's dollars on silliness like this. I will NEVER vote for any politician who would support this level of regulation.
Scott Soltero	Canyon Country, CA	2012-07-27	As a parent of small children and a magnet enthusiast, I agree that a complete ban on the sale of magnets is not the answer to the problem. Education of the dangers inherent with the product should be given the same amount of attention that household chemicals, knives, and firearms receive.
Jonathan Ledbetter	Reno, NV	2012-07-27	I'm signing because "warning labels are ineffective" is a dumb reason to ban something.
Brandon Hansen	Moses Lake, WA	2012-07-27	This should definitely be a parent's issue. Not the government's.
Shawn Dixon	Waycross, GA	2012-07-27	Banning magnets is absurd.
Jett Williams	Gold Coast, Australia	2012-07-27	Because it will not stop children playing with other, much more dangerous things. Knives are not ment to be left on the ground, and neither are magnet spheres!
Mark Lawson	Las Vegas, NV	2012-07-27	There are many things more dangerous than these magnets, and they have very clear warnings on the package.
Christian Bennett	Tahoe City, CA	2012-07-27	Magnets don't kill people, bad parents do.
Joshua Parks	Hertford, NC	2012-07-27	Parents should monitor what toys their child should have, not the government!

Stephan Abt	Harrison, OH	2012-07-27	I am signing because I believe that the magnets are inherently obvious to be dangerous to children and thus incidents of parental neglect leading to indigestion is not a fault of the product itself. Also, ZenMagnets does an overly sufficient job in packing and marketing their product of magnetic balls to show they are not a toy and should be handled by adults.
John L	NY, NY	2012-07-28	First you ban chocolate eggs, and now magnets? But everybody is allowed to buy and carry firearms? Don't you realize there's something extremely wrong in your country???
james tonkinson	Houston, TX	2012-07-28	What the fuck is wrong with my Government?
David Jacobs	Haddon Township, NJ	2012-07-28	There are many far more dangerous things that the CPSC should be focusing on. A total ban is a draconian measure. If the CPSC wants to protect children then focus on products marketed to them and make sure packaging is clear. Anyone with any common sense can look at small spheres only millimeters in diameter and know that they are not meant for children. That doesn't mean they should not be available for sale.
Nate Andrews	Hudson FL, FL	2012-07-28	This type of governmental intrusion is absurd and offends the most common sense. STOP IT!
Christian Huebner	Santa Clara, CA	2012-07-28	You can't legislate common sense.
Thomas Ethridge	Pflugerville, TX	2012-07-28	Almost every other product produced has caused more injuries to children than the magnets this law bans. Anything can be harmful to a child, it is the responsibility of the parent to insure their children are safe.
Jesse Quinn	Lakehills, TX	2012-07-28	No danger
Travis Davis	Springville, AL	2012-07-28	This suit sets the precedent that the burden of protecting childrens' safety no longer falls upon the parent.
Ryan Lupi	Los Lunas, NM	2012-07-28	If the US government is going to ban everything that might be a risk to children they need to ban EVERYTHING. Legos, DSI game cartridges, EVERYTHING. This is absolutely ridiculous!
Ivan Aviles	Palmdale, CA	2012-07-28	Cause people are stupid. Really stupid.
Dexter Bendicion	Reseda, CA	2012-07-28	These toys are meant for adults which is clearly stated on them. This is punishing everyone who knows how to use them responsibly because of the few who don't know how to watch their children and tell them not to eat magnets.
Kevin Most	Flushing, NY	2012-07-28	This is just silly, and sets a dangerous precedent where we will soon be banning every single product that has the slightest potential to hurt someone. Plastic bags kill far more kids every year than some rare-earth magnets do.
Matthew Telesky	Rochester, NY	2012-07-28	This ban is insane, it is up to the responsible adults who buy these products to monitor their use, much more hazardous materials are sold every day with reckless abandon.
Christopher Goodwin	Beaver Dams, NY	2012-07-28	I own a set of Buckyballs. There's a GIANT WARNING LABEL that says not to give them to kids, because they could eat them and get SERIOUSLY HURT or DIE. I bought these three years ago, before anyone got hurt with them. The people who got hurt didn't pay attention to the labels, the manufacturer shouldn't get penalized for that.
Zachary Brown	Los Angeles, CA	2012-07-28	Magnet spheres have helped me gain a deeper understanding of the forces of the physical universe. They're not just a toy. Please don't take magnet spheres away from me just because a few people hurt themselves by handling them irresponsibly.

Cameron Wagner	Woodburn, OR	2012-07-28	I let my 3 year old play with these all the time but unlike the morons wanting these banned I supervise my child. Parents these days are so into banning everything due to not wanting to properly supervise children.
david danforth	Raymond, WA	2012-07-28	It is the right of any adult to own and purchase these magnet spheres. In the agencies overzealous efforts to protect people from themselves it is not their role to strip citizens of there access to usefull products marketed to adults, for adults.
Andrew Hoang	Forest Park, GA	2012-07-28	These have a very practical use in my physical science class. Using these magnets allow myself and my students the opportunity to construct simple electromagnetic motors.
R. Scott Clark	Dublin, OH	2012-07-28	Please reverse this decision. It makes little sense that responsible adults should be deprived of magnets because a (very) small number of kids had neglectful parents that let them eat magnets.
Mary Canzano	Vandergrift, PA	2012-07-28	We don't need more regulations! Warning labels need to be placed but people need to be responsible for their own safety.
Melissa Geist	Iola, KS	2012-07-28	Why should everyone be punished because some parents were too stupid to keep these away from kids that would eat them?
Ace Cec	Plainfield, IL	2012-07-28	if you do not have the intelligences to know not to have a tiny magnet anywere near your mouth... you probably shouldnt be messing with highly powerful magnets... and the fact that they are trying to ban due to the magnets conection to sacred geometry and the true ways of thought and life, these magnets show parallels into natural ways to harmonize and operate... which wont help them sustain their population of drones and sheep now will it
Steve Allen	Oregon, WI	2012-07-28	How can you be so hypocritical. Latex balloons have harmed and killed many more children that these magnets have. Why have you not banned them. Utterly ludicrous.
Michael Anderson	Columbus, OH	2012-07-28	The creator of BuckyBalls have made every effort to educate the consumers who are purchasing their products. Bad parents are responsible for the very few incidents that have occurred. Not the creator of a product designed and marketed to adults! If they ban BuckyBalls, they might as well ban household cleaners, anything with sharp edges and anything that takes batteries. The CPSC is killing a business for no reason.
Graeme Bunyan	San Jose, CA	2012-07-28	I'm fairly sure people can also die from eating rat poison, knives and guns. There's no need to be silly and ban, of all things, magnets.
Zaron Gibson	Red Deer, Canada	2012-07-28	These magnets are not targeted towards toddlers. There is no reason an adult or even anybody above 10 or 12 years old shouldn't have them.
Daniel Barnight	Essex Junction, VT	2012-07-28	Clearly states not a toy for kids. You wouldn't let a young kid play with a paintball gun would you? Paintballs look just like gumballs you aren't banning them are you?
Matt Rayner	Hoboken, NJ	2012-07-28	The magnets have adequately displayed warnings. This ban is arbitrary and capricious.
Tamara Willis	Poland, ME	2012-07-28	Adults and young adults love these. They are fun and creative. Warnings of the dangers should be sufficient. Cigarettes do a lot more harm especially second hand smoke to my young asthmatic children. Priorities People. Priorities.
brett thevenot	raleigh, NC	2012-07-28	At some point, people need to take responsibility for their own stupidity.
Colin Dean	Pittsburgh, PA	2012-07-28	The safety hazard is an illusion proffered by neglectful parenting. Deaths are tragic, but the cause of the tragedy is a person not mindful of the recommendations and guidelines pushed by the manufacturers.

Jeremy Coler	North Lima, OH	2012-07-28	This type of litigation is evidence of how out of touch with reality some people have become. The answer to the world's ills is not more laws to control to populace, but rather more education to empower the populace.
Nick Giglio	Smyrna, GA	2012-07-28	I need the government to protect me from things I can't protect myself from. I don't need them to outlaw stupidity.
Todd Thompson	Cambridge, MA	2012-07-28	Magnets cause fewer injuries than trampolines, skateboards, or balloons. Legislate fairly, please.
adam barakat	weeki wachee, FL	2012-07-28	its the parents responsibility to keep their children safe from swallowing things. not the government. you cannot just ban dangers away. how dare you.
Chris Christman	Bethany, MO	2012-07-28	This is just ridiculous. These aren't meant for children. They have warnings on them. This is just another example of parents not wanting to get blamed for neglecting their own children, so they start pointing their fingers at anyone else to help get the attention away from themselves.
Joseph Pomes	Rochester, NY	2012-07-28	The danger of ingestion is the responsibility of the parents, not the company.
Zachary Kimble	Knoxville, TN	2012-07-28	I have no children and enjoy playing with Bucky Balls. Parents should not buy products that are dangerous to children. Government intervention is unwarranted.
Abbigail Simpson-Aultman	Charlotte, MI	2012-07-28	I want these magnets so badly one day.
Mustafa Alammar	NORCO, CA	2012-07-28	I'm signing this because I'm responsible enough to keep small magnets away from children just like I'm responsible enough to keep household cleaners, spray paint, small metal rods that can be stuck into wall sockets, and so on away from them.
Rick Parrent	Lexington, KY	2012-07-28	This is ridiculous overregulation. If parents did their job and monitored their kids and toys like they're supposed to, this wouldn't be a problem. Yes, accidents happen in the blink of an eye, but if they're kept out of the reach of children, the possibility of ingesting these is greatly diminished. These toys are for adults and have been marketed as such; there is no need to ban this class of product.
Severyn Henhalo	Philadelphia, PA	2012-07-28	because this prohibition makes no sense. a child can see the absurdity
Bryan Brodie	Denver, CO	2012-07-28	I agree that this action is excessive...
Eric Cobb	Miramar, FL	2012-07-28	This is ridiculous. They are banning magnets because children might choke on them? Let the parents deal with that it's not the governments job.
Jordan Austin	Portland, OR	2012-07-28	I am responsible enough to own registered firearms but cannot play with magnets because they "might" be dangerous? Seriously, it sounds sarcastic but what kind of answer can you even give to that?
Nick Meyer	Basehor, KS	2012-07-28	Why no ban on balloons or Legos? More kids have died via legos and those ARE marketed toward children.
Christopher Carew	Tempe, AZ	2012-07-28	It is not the role of the government to legislate a single view of safety upon individuals, not at the cost of any, even small, measure of freedom.
Ria Owen-Thomas	Atlantic Beach, FL	2012-07-28	I'm a mother of a 6mth old boy & I think it's absurd to ban an item that clearly state keep away from kids. Do they ban knives because they could cut your child??

Yvonne Jackson	Canton, OH	2012-07-28	There are many other things out there that don NOT carry warning labels that carry much higher risks to children that do not carry any kind of warning whatsoever. It is time for the government to stay out of our homes and lives and to allow personal responsibility be the solution. These are not a children's toy as it CLEARLY states on the packaging. If they can't read, they shouldn't be purchasing the product. My 16 year old autistic son loves these things as building, order and symmetry are his way of playing and relaxing. He can spend hours creating intricate designs with these - please leave them alone!
Christopher Gibbe	Austin, TX	2012-07-28	Because this makes as much sense as outlawing sharp things because children cut themselves.
jared eglinski	Vancouver, Canada	2012-07-28	One can create the platonic solids and geometric shapes that enable plant growth.
Mitchell Cairns	San Jose, CA	2012-07-28	It is not the governments responsibility to turn our homes into padded cells because parents are irresponsible!
Michael Sosebee	Cypress, TX	2012-07-28	This action is outside the role that government should play. We need much less of you...everywhere.
Mark Koellmann	Cranford, NJ	2012-07-28	I want me some BALLS!

Chris Munk	Deltona, FL	2012-07-28	Save Zenmagnets!
Kyle Silliman	Chico, CA	2012-07-28	Leave our balls alone! Seriously though, magnets are fun and inventive toys for ADULTS. Parents need to be more responsible but in the end kids are going to stick ANYTHING they can in their mouths. You might as well ban legos and all other small toys for the same reason.
Ted Dobyns	South San Francisco, CA	2012-07-28	This ban is ridiculous. Entire companies are going out of business because a few parents couldn't be bothered to watch what their kids put in their mouths.
Jason Portwood	Edgewood, KY	2012-07-28	Find a better solution other than an easy one that takes responsibility away from someones hands.
John Kiernan	Chico, CA	2012-07-28	Protecting people from themselves, why don't you come up with my weekly diet too?
David Richter	Kalamazoo, MI	2012-07-28	If we ban these, then we should ban handguns. What is the purpose of a handgun? Who uses handguns? Who are they marketed towards? Are they more or less dangerous for children than 5mm magnets? The lack of common sense in this country is staggering.
austin carter	missoula, MT	2012-07-28	Bucky Balls and Zen Magnets are fun, educational, high quality products. They do not pose a threat to the general public so banning them would be a tragedy to not only american rights but the hard working employees at these two companies. Come on! Just stop! The legal system has already ruined enough of the qualities that makes the United States great.
David Griffith	Minnetonka, MN	2012-07-28	I thinking banning these products is over stepping the boundaries of our government. The buckyball company has more than done their part to let the risks of the product be known. I find it amazing that we are concerned about buckyballs when there are far larger issues in this country to be concerned about.
Stephen Lecheler	Plano, TX	2012-07-28	Let justice be done and ban food, drink, and all other greater forms of child death prior to taking away toys for adults.

Jonathan Bass	Brookings, SD	2012-07-28	These magnets aren't toys for children. they are marketed to adults. Why should they be banned do to the negligence of some adults?
mike mercuri	NEW ORLEANS, LA	2012-07-28	This is outrageous.
Eric Tend	Dublin, CA	2012-07-28	Banning all magnetic spheres for a tiny minority of incidents is pure absurdity. With only two dozen reported cases in a three year period and well over 2.5 million sales in the general population (from USA Today) shows that the warning labels are actually working. This precautionary measure with these statistics doesn't make a whole lot of sense. Whenever there is a warning label, it should be the responsibility of the parent along with common sense to provide the proper education on handling such materials. As a responsible parent, I allowed my 5 year old use and create some really cool stuff with my Zen Magnets under supervision. Today, a year later, I have no worries of him mishandling or swallowing them. I don't need to have the Federal Government regulate something like this in the best interest of my safety or my family's. I seem to be doing fine on my own without their help. Magnetic Spheres are not just a desk toy, then are also a great new art medium for creating wonderful sculptures. Check out Mr Qu's gallery and you will see.
Jesse Gearhart	Osage Beach, MO	2012-07-28	We shouldn't be banning or coddling the nation from such trivial things that proper parenting would have prevented in 99% of the cases. The "Land of the Free" is lie enough without more asinine things added to the list of what's not allowed.
James Cruze	Phoenix, AZ	2012-07-28	If a Product is sold with a clear "intended for Children 13+" in print on it's box and multiple ingestion warnings throughout it's packaging, then should it be the moronic parents fault for allowing their small child to ingest such a product? Why not go the whole nine yards and ban any object small enough to fit a a child throat from store shelves rather than merely scapegoating Zen Magnets and Buckyballs an the only potential choking hazards on the market
Ryan Long	San Francisco, CA	2012-07-28	Parents need to be responsible for their children's upbringing.
David Goochee	Doylestown, PA	2012-07-28	I love these magnet toys. They are fun and harmless to individuals who do not eat them. Putting mandatory warnings on all of them would be one thing. Banning their sale to children would be another viable option. But to ban them outright seems Orwellian, if not Kafkaesque. Please reconsider this action.
mark snyder	Los Angeles, CA	2012-07-28	24/2000000 = are you kidding me? the world is a really scary place if we're going to prohibit the sales of magnets.
William Rathbun	new york, NY	2012-07-28	Nanny States don't work. There's more dangerous things in households than there are in magnets. t This is ridiculous, you'd think they were encouraging children to eat the magnets based on this overreaction.

Michael Solomon	Morgantown, WV	2012-07-28	I own Zen Magnets, and I am extremely responsible with them. I don't let any small children near them, and I would never even think of putting them anywhere near my mouth. If anyone else has my magnets, I make sure to warn them not to swallow them. Just because there have been some injuries due to the magnets doesn't mean that they should be banned. Based on the amount of sales of magnets and the amount of incidents, there is a tiny chance (about 0.00048%) that an injury will occur. This kind of banning is a waste of the government's resources.
John Dunderdale	Kenbridge, VA	2012-07-28	I can not stand by without protesting another step in the dumbing down of the USA.
Zac Treft	Dallas, TX	2012-07-28	I can't believe the only toy I've bought in the last 5 years was taken off of the market because a possible 20-30 people had health issues with them out of the 2 million sets sold in the past three years.... Kids have a higher chance of dying from aspirin but that's been on the market forever. I'm just a 24 year old college student looking to pass the time and big brother wants to step in and take control over it? Bullshit. Ban cigarettes, ban harsh chemicals destroying the earth, ban anything that would actually save lives but don't ban buckyballs
Russell Pyle	Sacramento, CA	2012-07-29	To ban these would be just plain stupid.
Jim Baker	Kennesaw, GA	2012-07-29	I'm a responsible adult here who owns all of the Buckyball products. This is absurd. We can't wrap the entire planet in soft foam.
Matt Monterosso	Norwood, OH	2012-07-29	They are magnets. Like many things, ingesting them may not be a wise choice. This is simply asinine.
Jamie Grau	Orlando, FL	2012-07-29	This is America, one should have the freedom to buy, sell, and trade goods and services. How are tiny magnets with a warning label any more dangerous than prescription medications or hand guns?
james brown	simi valley, CA	2012-07-29	The government needs to get out of my business.
Josiah Elsberg	Nampa, ID	2012-07-29	This seems like a bad parenting problem. Why should adults have to suffer, these are for ADULTS not CHILDREN
Drew Best	Warrenton, VA	2012-07-29	This ban is an overstep of authority and inconsistent when you look at injuries from other items. The CPSC needs a reality check.
Adam Miller	Frankfort, KY	2012-07-29	It is ludicrous to ban Buckyballs. there is no reason to ban a toy that is marketed to responsible ADULTS. As an adult, I have had 2 sets of these and have yet to cause any harm to myself or any small child. This company should face no repercussions for the act of someone that uses them in an irresponsible manner, for God's sake people this is a toy for ADULTS!0
joseph shelton	maylene, AL	2012-07-29	because this ban is completely retarded.
Nikolaus Stromberg	Somonauk, IL	2012-07-29	These products are clearly not made for children young enough to swallow them, and even have plenty of warning labels to remind people. The rest of us should not be punished due to a few bad parents out there. Banning these is not just a wrong policy, it's downright anti-freedom! Stop trying to protect us from ourselves! And stop catering to bad parents who want to pass the blame. There are many worse products actually classified as children's "toys", which are perfectly legal. This whole issue couldn't be more absurd.
Jon Leszczynski	Warren, MI	2012-07-29	In America we should not punish the product because the consumers, on rare occasions, so stupid things with the product. We need to hold the consumer to some minimal level of responsibility and common sense and not punish companies when some people fail to live up to those standards.
Corey Friedenberger	Altoona, PA	2012-07-29	If you want to ban magnets, you may as well ban anything that can harm a child if parents are idiot enough to let the child have it.

ed murphy	erie, PA	2012-07-29	That my tax dollars should go towards an exercise as absurd as this appalls me. and to be told as a consumer that I, in so many words, am not intelligent enough to own small magnetic spheres is even more offensive. These magnets are perfectly safe for their intended audience and their intended use. The failings of a handful of people to be responsible parents cannot reasonably be used as justification for a blanket ban. To do so would only serve to excuse them for their lapses in judgment, to portray the manufacturers and distributors as liable for something that they did not do, and to punish the millions of responsible consumers who actually use and enjoy the product responsibly.
Jared Rose	Winnipeg, Canada	2012-07-29	You're killing an entire industry because some people have been killed by tragic accidents. Regrettable as this is, it is also a simple fact of life - careless or negligent handling of ANYTHING can result in injury or death. Everyone's mother used to scold them for running with scissors, and I'm sure there were more than a few children who accidentally stabbed themselves whilst doing so - did that necessitate a total ban on scissors?? Of course not - that would be stupid, right?? It's the same story here. Banning otherwise harmless products to "protect" people from their own stupidity is simply ridiculous.
Andrew Gooch	San Diego, CA	2012-07-29	It is ridiculous that they would ban these, it is an individual's responsibility to keep these from children not the government.

Alec Carpenter	Aurora, CO	2012-07-29	This is non-sensical bullshit. ZEN Magnets(Magnet Spheres) are awesome and help bring both entertainment and vibrational harmony. There is literally no good reason for such a ban/law, especially when ALL Magnet Type things have very specific WARNINGS! If you ingest a magnet, you're retarded. If you let your child play with and ingest a magnet, you are simply even more retarded and should not be a parent.
cristian lopez	Wilmington, DE	2012-07-29	i love these toys!!!!
Daniel Peykar	Hoboken, NJ	2012-07-29	magnets should not be banned!
Caleb Deuter	Littleton, CO	2012-07-29	Magnets are the future, just like the minds of children. If we cannot allow children to be inspired, where will future developments, technological or otherwise, come from ? As Albert Einstein said : "The most beautiful thing we can experience is the mysterious. It is the source of all true art and all science. He to whom this emotion is a stranger, who can no longer pause to wonder and stand rapt in awe, is as good as dead : his eyes are closed."
Barbara Jones	Royal Oak, MI	2012-07-30	There are plenty of things out there that are dangerous if used improperly.... think of GUNS! I feel people can continue to use rare earth magnets for fun and art if they are used properly and not sold anywhere near toys!
Ryan Bailey	Richmond, VA	2012-07-30	Quit WASTING our tax dollars by trying to ban magnets. Magnet spheres are an adult product marketed to ADULTS who don't need to be protected from themselves. If children get ahold of a clearly labeled product, blame their parents, not the manufacturer. If you want to ban a harmful product, how about cigarettes? How many deaths occur and surgeries are performed each year because someone used cigarettes ACCORDING TO DIRECTIONS? I'm going to guess just a tad more than 24. There are COUNTLESS products more dangerous than magnets. As a final note, your tactic of strong-arming retailers, thereby denying the magnet companies due-process of law is reprehensible.
Alex Simpson	Augusta, GA	2012-07-30	Government regulation is getting ridiculous.

Aziz Abdelaziz	Doha, Qatar	2012-07-30	As we consumers expect responsible manufacturers to put warnings on their products. we also have a responsibility to handle and place these products safely. Same goes for medication, DIY tools, detergents, I can think of many other products that can be misplaced and accessed by kids around the house. Its our responsibility as adults to make sure our kids are safe and that decision ought to stay with them.

Steven Query	Leesburg, VA	2012-07-30	The ban is based on misuse of a product by an unintended consumer group. Would you ban the sale of wheeled luggage if a few kids aged 8 and under zipped themselves inside and rolled down hills (after warning label clearly states that the luggages is for transport of clothes and travel items, and not for the use of children under the age of 10)? Terrible imagery, and I'm sorry, but this comes down to a parenting issue, not a harmful product. Actually, better yet, why haven't fireworks, firearms, bicycles, etc. been banned on the same principle?
Edward Lincoln	Quincy, MA	2012-07-30	1.) Because they are great educational toys. 2.) The concept are a spherical magnet is so broad that an ban could easily interfere with many high tech industrial products. 3.) And the risk is so obvious that any rational adult should be able to protect himself...at some point people do have to take personal responsibility.
Craig Belpedio	Chicago, IL	2012-07-30	These "toys" are clearly labeled as not intended for children. It's not the magnet creator's fault that people ignore the warning labels. Don't punish those of us that can use and have fun with these magnets responsibly!

Gregory Dyess	Anytown, TX	2012-07-30	Parents MUST take personal responsibility for the safety of their children. Charles Fayle	North Chesterfield, VA	2012-07-30	Our government is totally out of control. All ability to conduct rational decision making has been lost. This ridiculous prohibition on magnets, though very annoying, is just another symptom of deep corruption and compromise of our Republic by the technocrats and petty politicians. The reversal of this prohibition, however, should not be trivialized. Any stand taken by the People to stop the government and force it to adhere to its own declared limitations is important. So by all means let's voice our opinion clearly and loud, to our elected officials in particular, and get this absurd product ban reversed.

Manuel Dalton	Sioux City, IA	2012-07-30	I am an adult, I haven't eaten any magnets yet and I don't plan to. I didn't purchase my magnets in a toy store, I found them online being sold as a cubicle toy/decoration. For adults. I am aware of the hazards related to these magnets and make sure to keep them away from my electronics, as well as away from pets or my friends' kids. It's not terribly hard since I usually leave them at my desk, at work.
Eric Hollingsworth	Conway, AR	2012-07-30	I am a 26 years old single male adult. I do not have kids. I have a set of these at my desk at work. I should have that right. It is ridiculous to ban a product because a small fraction of 1% of these toys cause injury. It is also ridiculous for a government agency to ban a product because parents are too stupid to know better than to even have them in the same household as a toddler/small child. If you're going to ban products. start with the product that causes the most deaths and go in order.
Christopher Sciumbata	Reston, VA	2012-07-30	Being born and raised in the United States I was taught that Freedom was one of our core national values. The fact that a government regulator can decide to dismantle an industry which provides a fun product which is causing injury due to its misuse and abuse is counter to all of the tenets of a free society.
Benjamin Shelton	High Rolls Mountain Park, NM	2012-07-30	As a responsible adult without children, I am disappointed that a government entity would prohibit me from purchasing items for my own use based exclusively on questionable statistics and dubious information.
Adam Carroll	Goose Creek, SC	2012-07-30	Government should not be regulating this much of our lives
Brian Tai	Denver, CO	2012-07-30	They're seriously trying to ban the sale of magnets. WTF. Magnets can be harmful if swallowed just like anything can be harmful if swallowed. Let's ban everything.
Roohi Ali	Chicago, IL	2012-07-31	On most magnets it DOES have a warning to not give the product to children, or it has an age restriction.
Andrew Coles	San Diego, CA	2012-07-31	Many will lose a right to an amazing educational and entertaining product, that I personally own and enjoy, all because a minute amount of cases. How is it okay to destroy so much good for such little bad? Its not the magnets that are the problem, its the irresponsible owners. I am appalled that there is even a need for this petition and stand behind my freedom one hundred percent. I understand a need for some level of public safety and awareness, but this crosses the line.
Steven Mays	Jacksonville, FL	2012-07-31	This is a knee jerk reaction to a problem of ignorance and fear of the large power of such a small object. This is a typical reaction of those who errantly believe themselves to be intelligentsia when in fact they are just sheep. They are reacting out of paranoia of a new possibility of a frightening injury that they have not seen before and believe that only they are capable of removing the hazard and protecting the public. The shame is that they showed no thought for the tremendous potential for benefit the small object has economically. Further, the greater travesty is the neglect of the infinite benefit it holds for education and creativity.
Troy Weinreich	New Westminster, Canada	2012-07-31	This whole thing is frivolous and ridiculous. Also this move affects more than just US consumers. CPSC have no jurisdiction here.
Lynda Pietka	Livonia, MI	2012-07-31	Get Government out of our faces and leave us and our balls alone!
James Poulsen	Milwaukee, WI	2012-07-31	This ban makes no sense, there are so many other things out there that can kill or harm you. These products are properly labeled so a consumer knows the risks of misuse.
Orrie Pelc	Sacramento, CA	2012-07-31	Please make people take responsibility for their children, and stop blaming product manufacturers for everything!

Name	Location	Date	Comment
Stephen Peterson	Los Angeles, CA	2012-07-31	The power of responsibility lies with parents as much as with the product. The product has clear warnings, and parents need to heed these warnings.
Michael Herweg	Valley Stream, NY	2012-07-31	As an adult user of Buckyballs, I find them to be a lot of fun to play with, and the company should not be punished for the lack of parental oversight in some cases. The packaging is clearly labeled that they are not intended for children, and even says that swallowing them can cause internal damage/bleeding.
Megan Wallace	Mound City, MO	2012-07-31	This attempted ban on Buckyballs and similar magnets is absolutely ridiculous, illogical, and uncalled for.
David Starmer	Greensboro, NC	2012-07-31	This is overreach by the nanny state CPSC and an abdication of any sort of personal responsibility.
K S	Chattanooga, TN	2012-07-31	It's time we started making people take responsibility for their actions/their children's actions. Quit ruining everything for those of us that pay attention to warnings, know what we're doing and have a little common sense (and actually use that large organ in our skull). I don't want children hurt any more than most people, but this isn't a children's toy. It's time we stood up for something or pretty soon we won't have anything to stand up for.
Connie O'Dell	Boulder, CO	2012-07-31	I as an adult appreciate BuckyBalls, and as an adult I accept the responsibility of properly supervising minor users of my toys, or not allowing their use if I felt they would not honor my safety precautions. I feel that the discrimination against this one category of products compared to the whole universe of potentially hazardous products amounts to a witchhunt against the companies who sell primarily these products.
Robert Dubner	New York, NY	2012-07-31	I find these magnets to have many positive qualities. That there have been injuries is tragic, but many useful, thought-provoking, and creativity-inspiring "toys" can be dangerous. These magnets don't deserve to be singled out.
rick buckle	wichita, KS	2012-08-01	Because of the absolute absurdity of it all.
Adam Brooker	Brooklyn, NY	2012-08-01	CPSC, in this case you've gone overboard. It's an adult toy with clear warning labels. Purchasers have the responsibility to heed them.
Jill VandenWyngaard	Appleton, WI	2012-08-01	"Those who sacrifice liberty for security deserve neither."
Karen joseph	pittsburgh, PA	2012-08-01	This is a ridiculous suit given the stats.
Joanne Sgrignoli	Harrisburg, PA	2012-08-01	I am an adult, and long before Buckyballs I owned a set of small magnets that sat on my desk at work. I only allowed my daughter to play with them if I was right there with her. They came with a warning, but even without the warning I was intelligent enough to know to not allow my young daughter to play with them without supervision. It is not the government's job to regulate my intelligence in making certain that a product I've purchased, with warning labels about their not being for children, are being used properly. That's a Big Brother type of action and a waste of our taxpayer money. This is government at its worst and I will NOT vote for any legislator who would support this type of regulation/ban.
Joanne Sgrignoli	Harrisburg, PA	2012-08-01	I am an adult and for years I had a set of star magnets on my desk at work. If my daughter visited, I allowed her to play with them as long as I was watching her - my job as a parent, right? This product also came with a warning that the product wasn't for children and I am intelligent enough to know this without the government's help. This is an absurd waste of taxpayer money and I, too, will NOT vote for any member of congress who would support this level of regulation. What next? Licensing in order to be a parent?
Shaun Templet	Gonzales, LA	2012-08-01	My 9 year old knows better than to play with my grown up stuff without me. Shouldn't all parents teach their kids the same!?! I didn't need legislation to tell me to watch my child.

Kate Jarvis	Amherst, NY	2012-08-01	Let's practice responsible parenting and not put blame on innocent companies when accidents happen, as they inevitably will with any product. Also, to say that warning labels do not work is in direct conflict with the purpose and previous actions of the CPSC and will set a terrible precedent for all CPSC actions in the future.
Jack Schylling	Essex, MA	2012-08-01	if you swallow pennies its bad news. Is the CPSC going to outlaw pennies? Same with so many things: Kitchen Knives, push-pins... Where is the government going to stop?
Michael Plotke	Seattle, WA	2012-08-01	The obvious idiocy of banning something "potentially dangerous" is astounding. The acceptance of such bans is a far greater threat the objects themselves. I can think of a dozen items, all more dangerous and all found in most households, off the top of my head: kitchen knives, chemical cleaners, electric outlets, stoves, cars, bookshelves, power tools, bicycles, etc, etc.
Bryce Stockwell	San Pedro, CA	2012-08-01	Freedom means letting people do dangerous things.
Rich Mingin	Telford, PA	2012-08-01	I've bought many of these magnets, keep them away from my kids, like a decent human being, and STRONGLY OBJECT to this unnecessary meddling.
Michael Goossen	Omaha, NE	2012-08-01	Because the incidents reported are caused by the irresponsibility of parents to keep the magnet spheres away from children, NOT of the magnet sphere sellers (who have used Warning labels to warn people about the danger of the magnets in the hands of children)!
Janice Holz	Lacey, WA	2012-08-01	If BB guns cause more injuries (and deaths) per year than magnet spheres, and BB guns are allowed, why should magnet spheres be outlawed? 22 injuries in 3 years is not that many, given how many sets of magnet spheres have been sold.
Lora Shekell	Evansville, IN	2012-08-01	Magnet ingestion, though dangerous and unfortunate, does not reflect on poor company policy, marketing or advisories on the packaging. I am the mother of two small children and keep my magnet spheres out of reach and out of sight of my children. Ingestions reflects more on the parents and guardians that allowed the situation to occur. To penalize small businesses whose sole product is magnetic spheres because of parental negligence is absurd.
Jeremy Luchak	Anchorage, AK	2012-08-01	Parental responsibility is not the CPSC's responsibility.
Logan Weast	West Chicago, IL	2012-08-01	Besides the complete ridiculousness of the CPSC's actions, I also want these to still be around and available for my kids when they ARE old enough to play with them.
david ash	Las Vegas, NV	2012-08-01	Stop legislating good parenting skills. It's the parents job to make sure their kids don't swallow random things.
Josh Thornton	Montgomery Village, MD	2012-08-01	This is an absurd misuse of CPSC funds attacking small american businesses for something that is statistically not a problem worth worrying over.
Elizabeth Olson	Oakland, CA	2012-08-01	Just because they don't know how they work is no reason to ban them.
Isaac Berger	Houston, TX	2012-08-01	I have purchased and owned these magnets for years and believe that a full-on ban is overkill. While major brands have already been properly labeled with warnings, I would not mind a few extras. However, this petition is against a very harsh and unusual punishment, a full-on ban and recall, of a lovely product that has comparability caused very very little harm to the overall population. Additionally, this product is in no way broken or defective. It has merely been misused a few times, probably accompanied with lack of judgment, like practically everything else on this planet.
Todd Pettit	Chaptico, MD	2012-08-01	I'm signing this petition because I feel the banning of a product should not be a fix for bad parenting skills and a lack of personal responsibility.

Taylor Hadden	Huntington, VT	2012-08-01	This is absurd. A gross misuse of governmental office. The people involved with this should be fired.
Dana Khoyi	Westford, MA	2012-08-01	Prohibition is ridiculous given the risk relative to other non-prohibited products.
Kevin Henry	St. Paul, MN	2012-08-01	I'm an adult and would never allow a child to use my Zen Magnets. Any injury to a child caused by these is only the fault of the parents or adults who allow the child access to the magnets. If the CPSC wants them back, they'll have to pry them out of my cold dead fingers. This is a ridiculous prohibition. By this logic, pens and pencils, scissors and various standard household items should also be prohibited for the injuries they may potentially cause. Stop wasting taxpayer money and your time and figure out a way to reduce the number of injuries and deaths from products already marketed and sold for children.
Al Adcock	Lynn Haven, FL	2012-08-01	Stop this ridiculous regulation. Trampolines cause more injury to children than magnets, although I am not suggesting a ban on trampolines either.
Henry Dan	Sandy Springs, GA	2012-08-01	Your stop order is ill thought out and unnecessary - just stop now, and re-think this foolish decision.
Jackson McIntyre	Austin, TX	2012-08-01	Instead of banning magnets why don't you strive to raise parenting skills, or education so a normal person or child won't try to eat a metal ball. It seems to me that Americans are just to fucking stupid, not that these magnetic balls pose some sort of health hazard.
Jim Kirk	Westborough, MA	2012-08-01	If magnets are outlawed, only outlaws will have magnets? That's ridiculous!
Michael Taggart	Granada Hills, CA	2012-08-01	This is an egregious overstep and abuse of government power and must be stopped.
Michael Richard	Sandy, UT	2012-08-01	You -idiots- need to get back to work on stopping the manufacture and distribution of actual products that are actually MARKETED to children which do actual harm to actual children. Knock this crap off, you pack of lackeys.
Justin Barnes	Sierra Madre, CA	2012-08-01	Unbelievable. Perhaps we are missing some sort of ulterior motive. This seems too strange to be real.
Daniel Nething	Chauncey, OH	2012-08-01	.Magnet sphere desk toys are a guilty pleasure of mine, and I would miss them greatly. Additionally, the risk of these toys compared to recreational equipment like trampolines is almost non existent, and it would be a serious miscarriage of justice and policy to ban magnet spheres ahead of other such risks. Even then, the US government overreaches. As all the risk is slowly removed from our environment, we will no longer be able to truly judge how to deal with small risks like these. In short, stop treating like the American public like children who shouldn't be allowed to decide for themselves.
Brian Vandegrift	Coeur d'Alene, ID	2012-08-01	It is statistically more responsible to ban trampolines (more ER inducing injuries per unit/population than magnets) and they are marketed towards children.
Marcos Velazquez	Clermont, FL	2012-08-01	This ban is ridiculous, especially when it's reasoning is that it's dangerous for kids. This item is strictly marketed and meant for adults. This shouldn't be in the hands of kids to begin with.
Sarah Carpenter	Austin, TX	2012-08-01	I use these in my counseling practice with ADHD teens and adults. I also am appalled at the govt harrassment of these companies.
frank martin	fultondale, AL	2012-08-01	Daar CPSC, if you have the money and manpower available to hassle these companies, please use it the way that you should and go and hassle the parents of these kids instead. These aren't labelled or sold as toys. They aren't intended for children.

Also, I don't take any government action for "my benefit" seriously so long as cigarettes are still legal. Hey-oh!

Tim Howe	Providence, RI	2012-08-01	Forcefully removing an educational and thinking aid like this will do far more harm to society than these hypothetical injuries from a responsibly marketed product.
Nicole Rossi	Brentwood, CA	2012-08-01	So, when do we start banning refrigerator letter-magnets? Clearly, they are marketed as children's toys, and with their bright colors, are even more enticing to children. See on Amazon: http://www.amazon.com/Megcos-Magnetic-Lowercase-Affordable-LMID-1097/dp/B0023ASUTI/ref=pd_sim_t_2 Whatever happened to actually supervising/playing with your children? What about buying age-appropriate toys? "Magnet spheres" are clearly "toys" for adults and mature older children (who do not eat anything and everything they might encounter). So much for personal responsibility and common sense! Thank goodness the government is there!
Katherine Semel	Nutley, NJ	2012-08-01	We don't need frivolous regulations! These products are already appropriately marketed to adults.
Joe Blook	Mountain View, CA	2012-08-01	It is ridiculous to ban a product that is clearly labeled to not be ingested on the off chance some unsupervised child might ingest them. At worst, it should be labeled as requiring purchasers to be 18+ years of age.
Tyson Cross	San Diego, CA	2012-08-01	The risk posed by these magnets is not due to their design or manufacture. Further, when used properly, there is zero risk of injury. That point alone separates these types of magnets from most products that require a product recall. There is a degree of user competence that must be assumed with all products - no different than a sharp kitchen knife or a skateboard.

Gabriel Hodge	Buchanan, MI	2012-08-01	There is no reason to ban sphere magnets, they have ingestion warnings on them. The only way an injury can occur is when a small child is given the magnets as a toy and the parents don't monitor them.
Darin White	Kennewick, WA	2012-08-01	I am not, nor ever have been, a consumer of this product - but the fact that they 'could' be harmful if handled incorrectly despite existing warning labels and reasonable marketing/product location is what is getting them removed? Well then you darn sure better ban pretty much every item on the market that isn't a consumable, because paperclips, staples, the plastic keys buttons on 10-keys - any number of things right here at my desk are dangerous under those nanny-state guidelines.

Josh Potts	Rainier, WA	2012-08-02	I've owned Zen Magnets for 2 years now. They were marketed clearly to me as an adult with adequate warning to keep from kids. It's absurd that they would be effectively banned in such a way by the CPSC. I've NEVER seen these magnetic spheres marketed as toys for kids. A warning is understandable, but let us make up our own mind as consumers.
Bill Motz	Burbank, CA	2012-08-02	I'm a liberal Democrat. I appreciate the role of regulation in government. But this seems like an overreaction to an exceptionally rare problem. The CPSC can ask for clearer labels, but they cannot insure against negligent parenting. I know a woman whose baby swallowed a bullet. In no way do I believe that was the manufacturer's fault.
Michael McElrath	Cleveland Heights, OH	2012-08-02	"Warning labels are useless" is a stupid reason to ban something. If that was the case, anything and everything that deserves any sort of warning would be banned. At what point do parents have to take responsibility for the safety of their children? While I believe the CPSC should exist, I do not believe that banning something as simple as magnetic balls. Will do anything other than disappoint many consumers. Once the magnet balls are banned, will we then ban magnet cubes? Cylinders? All magnets? Anything magnetic? Anything that uses electricity?
Will Arrington	Houston, TX	2012-08-02	There is a clear label on these magnets that they are not for children. The same kind of warnings are on bleach. Don't let your children play with things that could make them ill. Problem solved.
Kenneth Brewer	Arlington, MA	2012-08-02	You can't legislate common sense. Kyle English	Lake Station, IN	2012-08-02	Since I'm not a kid anymore I have started to lose interest in toys as a way to entertain myself when bored. The magnets have not only kept me well entertained, they also have bit of an educational value. The more you play with them the more you learned about them. My friends also liked them enough that I ended up obtaining an Xbox 360 from the money I earned selling them at school. But it still doesn't beat what the magnets can do. They are just amazing.
James Hatch	Avon, CT	2012-08-02	These are adult products, priced well above the child oriented toy category and need to be treated like similar products that have the potential for misuse but where the 99.999% of buyers who are not irresponsible are not denied them because of the fractional % of irresponsible users. There are many adult oriented products that can be misused by children (or even adults) like cigarettes (children eat the butts and suffer nicotine poisoning), alcohol (accidental ingestion & poisoning), common household cleaning products (poisonings), buckets (drownings), etc. None of these are banned. Logically a ban on magnetic spheres argues for a ban of all of the above. There are additional categories of products that are directly marketed to or for children to use or primarily oriented toward children (e.g. balloons). These include bicycles, trampolines, swimming pools, bow & arrow sets, etc. Individually each of these cause more injuries in a week than these balls have in five years. Again, following the logic that supports a ban of magnetic spheres there is no reason to allow those products to remain in production when they represent orders of magnitude greater carnage than magnetic spheres ever have.

Robert Silvestris	Worcester, MA	2012-08-02	I'm sick and tired of parents refusing to do their job and actually pay attention to their kids and instead relying on the government to do it for them. The government is treating magnets, MAGNETS, as though they are some sort of deadly weapon. This is insane. A kid could shove a pencil in his eye, does that mean we should ban pencils? I know 3 people who have stapled their own fingers, should we ban staplers? People do stupid things and they get hurt, there is no reason for actual legislation banning something just because a few people were too dumb to know that the could hurt themselves with it.

Brett Luckabaugh	Louisville, KY	2012-08-02	Look, I'm so liberal I'm practically communist, and I believe in strong governmental regulation; except when the regulation enforces a non-existent problem. Individuals aren't getting hurt because magnets exist, they are getting hurt because they have done something stupid against all warnings to the contrary. If a product tells you not to use it in a certain way, and you do, it is your fault. The only exception to this is if the object is dangerous in and of itself--under normal circumstances. However, it is not normal use of a magnet to ingest it, so therefore this regulation is an overstep of bounds and quite ridiculous.

Steven Ford	Highland Park, IL	2012-08-02	I am signing because I believe the CPSC has cast its net too wide, but I do caution people to understand how statistics work. The absolute number of mag ball injuries might be small compared to, say, household cleaner poisonings, but the number of households with cleaners is far greater than the number of households with mag balls. If I have a product which has shipped 100,000 units, and I get 99 reports of injuries, my product is far more dangerous than one which has shipped 100,000,000 units and I get 99 reports of injuries. I would like to see some real numbers before drawing any conclusions on the relative safety of different products.

These sorts of items were NEVER marketed as toys for children, and were intended for use by responsible adults only. The fact that there are parents irresponsible enough to let small children play with guns, glass, pointed objects and near open roads does not constitute a need for a ban on those items but a higher stander on parents and greater punishment for negligence.

Stop passing regulations to serve idiot parents who can't teach their kids to not swallow stuff or don't watch them and let kids with brain function enjoy magnets.
Dwayne Pryce	Aurora, CO	2012-08-02	I have to admit, I'm positively flabbergasted that the CPSC is undertaking these steps. Why? These "toys" are created and marketed, not to children, but adults. Even if they weren't - 24 incidents? This is an obscene overreach considering the damage done! Sure, it's terrible for those 24 incidents (and I refuse to call them accidents; accidents imply that nobody was at fault. It is clear here that there are parties at fault here; dumbshit children and terrible parents, respectively), but that is such a statistically insignificant number that it is simply NOT worth the effort, loss of business, and time on EVERYONE'S part to try to stop! More people have had accidents with toilets in the last year than have had accidents with consuming magnets! All in all, this is a shocking display of irresponsible behavior on the part of both the US CPSC, the parents of these children, and in some cases, the children themselves. I can only hope that the US CPSC will come to realize their folly and rollback their draconian decision and try to regain some of the dignity and sanity that they have clearly lost by this ruling.
Stephen Hatch	North Andover, MA	2012-08-02	In the interest of science and education, zen magnets must be allowed to be manufactured and purchased in a free market and a free society. The cpsc should grow up and respect citizens .. and stop their silly attacks on non-dangerous consumer products.

James Barron	Orland, CA	2012-08-03	We do not need further intrusion into our private and business lives. Each ban, each restriction the U.S. government places on what we can and cannot buy is another test to see how much we can swallow (sorry for the pun) of this kind of restricting regulation. This is unfair, unfree, and unnecessary.
Jude Schneider	Chicago, IL	2012-08-03	Banning this product due to a few individuals inability to exercise proper oversight is beyond ridiculous. This product isn't even marketed to children! Why not follow suit and ban other products that can be just as dangerous if left to unsupervised children? There are plenty of actual toys that are marketed to kids that are just as dangerous. It is the parent's responsibility to ensure the safety of their children if they own this product, stay out of my life and keep your mitts off my magnets government!
Misty Wood	Laramie, WY	2012-08-03	These magnets are not food. David Garren Jr.	Columbia, SC	2012-08-03	While I would support regulations on specific items, like guns, this is of a totally different caliber. Why should everyone else be denied because people with children can't be trusted to take care of them?

Alec Wantoch	Avondale, PA	2012-08-03	Government regulation of products is not only ridiculous, it is immoral. People who do not have the insight to keep away from small children, even after reading numerous warning labels, are the ones to blame. Don't blame the oven for burning your hand. I am tired of Government regulation already, and pulling this only strengthens my beliefs that there should be no/very little regulation of commercial products.
Bryan Hartka	baltimore, MD	2012-08-03	As an adult who quite enjoys these, it would be a shame to see them taken off the market because of some incredibly irresponsible parents, and an agency fighting to stay relevant.
Christopher Mazur	Hiawassee, GA	2012-08-03	It is getting to the point in this country that everything is bad for someone and as our government tries to stop the "bad things" it will eventually stop everything from being manufactured and/or sold in the USA.

Most common citizens have more sense than these damned bureaucrats!
Kayla McKeown	Albuquerque, NM	2012-08-03	This is absolutely ridiculous. They are clearly marked that they are not for children and any ingestion issues are with the parents not the product. Leila Zucker	Washington, DC	2012-08-04	I am an emergency medicine physician and swallowing magnets like buckyballs is an exceedingly rare problem. According to the MMWR, from 2003 to 2006 there were 20 reported cases with one death attributed to ingested magnets (1). Swallowed button batteries, on the other hand, are a relatively common occurrence with a large number of morbidities. According to the National Capital Poison Control Center, from 2003 through 2006, there were 156 moderate complications from button battery ingestion, 23 major complications, and 2 deaths (2). But if I suggested banning button batteries, you'd call me batty. If you're really worried about public safety, you'd better ban button batteries before banning buckyballs. Dimitri Kipper	São Paulo, Brazil	2012-08-04	It is well-known worldwide (or at least thought) that one of the biggest factors that make other countries think your average American is a blatant moron is this sort of legislation. The banning of kinder surprise as well as products like this (both of which are a great tools to output logical thought and creativity on different ages), while absurdly worse products that bring nothing to a person's personal development but move millions in taxes are allowed to stick around clearly shows how biased, blind and not based on the well-being of American citizen this sort of process is.

Michael Brey	Annapolis, MD	2012-08-04	In general, I support the efforts of the CPSC. However, this is a massive and terrible overreach. In spite of warnings, children get their hands on household chemicals, (1.2 million times per year) so I guess this means they'll get rid of Drano next? Last month a 4yr old was killed playing with a gun, which happens about 500 times a year. Oh yeah, using this same logic, we need to get rid of pools and bikes (210 deaths and 1500 deaths respectively), children's vitamins (51,000 overdoses in 2008), Legos (57 deaths), scooters (3 deaths in 06), stuffed animals (2 deaths a year from small children falling into their pile of stuffed toys and suffocating), tricycles, balloons, nails...the list of things ahead of Buckeyballs, is nearly endless. This is an outrageous, egregious over-reach and must be stopped.

How do you ban toys because parents are too fucking stupid to give them appropriate toys? America (USA) is going to extreme measures to blame companies for not being idiot-proof for retards, and as a result the USA is becoming the most retarded nation in the planet! Case in point: The chairman of the CPSC is not smarter than a fifth grader. Dumb cunt!
Rachel Dwight	Richardson, TX	2012-08-04	The CPSC has gone too far. 2 years ago they drove hundreds of babywearing supply manufacturers out of business because of bogus "safety" concerns (that were in fact endorsed by stroller manufacturers).
Gabrielle Thatcher	Austin, TX	2012-08-04	There are plenty of other non-toy items children swallow and die from without CPSC action. Furthermore, until the CSPC is willing to impose bans on all "actual" toys (which are marketed towards children) imported from China and elsewhere which are so often lead containing products for children to chew on and become brain damaged from, they should stay out of the business of trying to ban these magnets which are clearly a far lesser threat than most household products under one's sink.
Heather Risdon	Elgin, IL	2012-08-04	This is a ludicrous ban for a product that is NOT even intended for children! I was planning on buying some for my brother-in-law for Christmas and I hope they are still around.
Si Chen	Lake Mary, FL	2012-08-05	This is a clear abuse of the CPSC's power and unfairly targets a specific product with an unreasonable justification. If you start banning things because kids CAN, and DO abuse them regardless of whether they're targeting kids. Then we might as well not sell any product that could be swallowed.
Jerry Kell	Mariposa, CA	2012-08-05	America is supposed to be a free country. Being able to buy magnets is a necessary freedom.
Brian Garst	Rockville, MD	2012-08-05	End the tyranny. Save our balls.
CLay Keiser	Kailua-Kona, HI	2012-08-05	Because I own some of these and they are no more dangerous than Legos. Kids are kids and they will eat stuff. Compared to so much other things on the market banning magnet spheres is effectively solving no problems. This is ridiculous.
Garrett Solt	Twin Falls, ID	2012-08-05	These magnets are surely far less a personal or public health hazard than the cigarettes people have a right smoke if they so choose. Therefore there cannot be any ethically justified reason for banning them. Also I'd like to exercise my right to buy some for myself, but clearly this personal incentive in no way weakens my simply and irrefutably sound argument that banning the magnets is wrong.
Roy Tyler	Memphis, TN	2012-08-05	This ban is just foolish. Are we going to outlaw radiator fluid now because kids or pets might drink it? Power tools because kids may injure themselves? Banning everything that might injure a child leaves nothing left. Buckyballs are marketed to adults and have warning labels. That should be sufficient.
Margi Brown	Spokane Valley, WA	2012-08-05	Every household has multiple items that are unsafe for small children.. The government is destroying jobs and business for what reason?

Robert Crossett	Burnaby, Canada	2012-08-05	Of all the things that could be banned - magnets? Do the research and find out how many children are injured or killed from dollar store products and try to remove those from the shelves - or better yet, tell parents to pay fing attention!!!
heather ferguson	SLC, UT	2012-08-05	As a ADULT who owns bukcyballs, this is one of the lamest things ever. instead of trying to punish the makers of the magnets why don't you punish the stupid parents who give an ADULT toy to their CHILD.
Paul Wilkins	Christchurch, New Zealand	2012-08-06	I'm signing this because the magnets are far less dangerous than many other items for sale.
Josina Hooks	Celebration, FL	2012-08-06	I believe the free enterprises tradition is being treated by the policies of the govt and we need to reverse many of Theses policy
John Paquette	Waltham, MA	2012-08-06	Neodymium magnets have given me great pleasure, and I'm sure they've inspired the minds of countless people age 14 and up. That, in the U.S., we, as citizens, are allowed, by the government, to responsibly enjoy such a wonderful product, even though it is potentially dangerous to young children, is an comforting indication to me that our government knows where it must not tread: on my right to enjoy my life with products that I love. Some adults enjoy knives meant for throwing. Some enjoy guns. Some enjoy archery. Some enjoy fishing. We ALL, as adults, enjoy products which should be kept out of the hands of children. It is our right to enjoy these products, and it is right, and good, that they are sold. This case is a case of the government exerting its ability to destroy human happiness. We have a right to have fun in our own way, and we each have a responsibility to keep children safe in the process. That responsibility lies with individuals, not with government bodies. Life has risks. And the more risks we are allowed to individually manage, the better people we are and become. And the more fun we have.
Lisa Royal	Martinez, GA	2012-08-06	Buckyballs aren't made for, or marketed to children and the company shouldn't be punished for parents that can't supervise their children.
J S	Las Vegas, NV	2012-08-06	Why the hell would any responsible parent even need a warning label to educate them that any small object is a health hazard to children? Whatever happen to common sense these days? Do stupid parents really need a label to tell them the obvious? To help them put two and two together? Stupid parents just shouldn't breed at all if they cannot contribute anything helpful to their children and to society. I don't want our enjoyment of Buckyballs magnets to be ruined by the small, irresponsible, moronic choices of the select few. It is time for irresponsible parents to suffer the consequences of their actions and learn from them. Their children dying from such actions, while harsh is something that they deserve as it is a brutally honest reminder to them on what happens when you are not smart enough to not even take care of your own children and give them appropriate toys to play with.

Laura Fischer	Grabill, IN	2012-08-06	This ban is stupid.
Khalid Safar	Naperville, IL	2012-08-06	magnets should not be banned for the poor decisions of people
Diane Harroff	Baltimore, OH	2012-08-06	This nanny state under Obama is ridiculous. I guess matches and lighters should be banned also-because even though there are warnings, people still leave them where kids can get them, and cause many more deaths and injuries than magnets!! Or household cleaners, because some parents don't keep them out of the reach of kids, DESPITE WARNINGS. All people should not be punished because some people lack PARENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.
Chris Benedict	Slidell, LA	2012-08-06	Really? You're banning magnets because they can be dangerous if swallowed? When are hotdogs and grapes going to be banned? They are far more deadly.
Jennifer Wieland	Ottawa, Canada	2012-08-06	I love these balls and can't believe no one wants to hold parents responsible to observe their children.
Cole Shatto	Encinitas, Germany	2012-08-06	The banning of spherical magnets is insulting to my intelligence.
Derek Rogers	Chandler, AZ	2012-08-06	Don't ban Bucky Balls! Ban the stupid parents who let their children play with them. If you have children and cant guarantee keeping these out of reach, then be responsible and DONT BUY THEM.
Sam Andrus	Tuscaloosa, AL	2012-08-07	Completely absurd that CPSC is trying to take away fun little Magnets! IF THESE PEOPLE HAVE PROBLEMS WITH MAGNETS THEN THEY MUST HAVE PROBLEMS WITH AN AMAZING AMOUNT OF OBJECTS THEY COME IN CONTACT WITH ON A WEEKLY BASIS. <- this would make any ones life really suck.
Christian Nimri	Ashmore, Australia	2012-08-07	zen magnets are the best.
Shell Bern	Vail, Canada	2012-08-07	The current regulations defy logic and common sense. The CPSC is failing to reduce injuries from other key sources and is failing in it's mandate to protect children. It is also destroying American businesses, which is probably doing more damage to kids and their families than the prodcuts they are focusing on.
David Williams	Alpharetta, GA	2012-08-07	It is not the responsibility of the government to attempt to remove every dangerous product and element from the lives of the common citizen. To attempt to do so involves intolerably infringing upon the rights of the people. The incidents which have arisen as the result of these products are clearly cases where irresponsible parenting has led to the criminal endangerment of a child and I would expect the same actions to be taken against those parents as one would against a person who placed a loaded firearm into the crib of an infant.
Bryan Gaulle	NASHVILLE, TN	2012-08-07	Regulating magnets is irrational. This is a frivolous law. I hope the government attempts to actually provide good, rather than justify their paychecks through crap acts like this one.
Kenji Tasaka	Houston, TX	2012-08-07	Banning magnetic spheres is as unnecessary as banning any other toy that can be purchased by a person of any age. There are far more "dangerous" items for sale that anyone can purchase from a retail store right now. It should be the responsibility of the parents to ensure their children are playing with safe toys.
John Hanley	Hendersonville, TN	2012-08-07	People need to be responsible parents. The rest of society does not need to be held accountable due to a lack of good parenting skills by a few.

Zach Pennington	Lexington, KY	2012-08-07	There is a point where government regulation "in the interest of the people" reaches too far. This is an attack on the freedoms of the people, as well as an attack on the small businesses that have made livings for their employees selling these safe, fun, and educational products. Shame on the nanny state.
Mathew Shoemaker	Atlanta, GA	2012-08-07	Balloons and cigarettes are far more dangerous. Ban those first.

terry gerads	St Cloud, MN	2012-08-07	not right
Candace Mack	Mauldin, SC	2012-08-07	Is is just absurd to prohibit a product that is made for adults. Should we also ban pocketknives and superglue because a child might misuse them? Shouldn't parents be even a little accountable?
Christopher Donnelly	Barrington, RI	2012-08-07	This appears to be uneven application of the rules, especially seeing as this targets a product (zen magnets) which have not had an incident yet.
Corwyn Miyagishima	Worcester, MA	2012-08-07	Time for the government to stop taking personal responsibility out of the hands of the individual, and leave it as personal responsibility. Otherwise it's either a police state or a nanny state.
Suzanne Cook	Ottumwa, IA	2012-08-07	It's the responsibility of the adults to pay attention to the warning labels. Even thinking of banning such an item is so absurd, I expect for ALL bodies of water to eventually be banned so that people don't drown, too.
Kevin Lynch	Buffalo, NY	2012-08-08	Tragic, but many things are dangerous and have not been banned. Save the balls!
Donald Adams-Sellin	KALAMAZOO, MI	2012-08-08	I enjoy using the zen magnet magnet spheres and have never had an issue with them. I'd never let a small child play with them, and think that while perhaps an age gate isn't unreasonable, the outright banning of them is absolutely absurd, and frankly insults the intelligence of the american people that we cannot think not to swallow magnets.
Aaron Haun	Lenoir City, TN	2012-08-08	It is sad that something like this is even needed... Next thing we know they will be banning the sale of computers, you know, cause they have small parts that can be bad if swallowed,.,
Patrick Eddington	Seaside, CA	2012-08-08	Parents need to take responsibility for what their children eat. If they can't figure out that magnets should not be around children, they should not have kids!!

John Currie	Weirton, WV	2012-08-08	This is not an issue of whether or not the product is safe, it is a mismarketing and education issue. Magnets are not the problem, it is bad parenting, stupidity, irresponsibility and a lack of education that causes injury. This is why the teaching of real science needs to stay in schools, stores and homes. It is the educational system, religious groups and government that is failing us, not technology and certainly not magnetic balls. Magnetic toys should not be marketed and children's toys and only to responsible adults. These magnetic balls are very educational; teaching magnetism, shapes, geometry, physics, among many other things including the basics of gravitational forces. If you get rid of magnetic balls then you must include all magnets and any product that uses any type of magnets because those magnets could be ingested just as easily even if it is inside a product. I have seen a child bust open products just to get the magnets out. Even I as a kid would rip things apart just to get the magnets out, but I was educated by schools and by my own family about them. These kinds of toys are what inspired me as a kid and pushed me toward the technology field. Neodymium magnets are a natural product (rare Earth magnets). It is a chemical element; symbol Nd and the atomic number of 60. This can fall into the same category as the "It's natural, it's safe" garbage. Natural does not mean safe. Natural products are banned all the time for the same mismarketing and lack of education. You would not eat arsenic (a natural product) because most everyone knows arsenic is poisonous and were educated to that fact; but have arsenic mismarketed and do not educate people on its dangers and this same stink will be raised about it. Hey, what you leave in the toilet is natural and people have contracted diseases and parasites from it and died. Lori Currie	Weirton, WV	2012-08-08	The problem is not with the magnets. The problem is irresponsibility among the persons allowing their children to play with these items unsupervised and with out tutorial. Magnets are an educational and entertaining way to experience a natural force first hand. They are tools for learning geometry, physics, math and even structural engineering. We have several sets of bucky balls in our home and I personally find them to be calming and aide in maintaining my dexterity. My husband has nerve damage and uses these bucky balls and similar products for therapy to improve his motor function and ability to hold on to things. I find them very therapeutic but we DO NOT allow children or even some adults to play with them. They are always hidden away up high in a safe place. There are sufficient warnings on these products about the hazards of them. They are not toys for small children or irresponsible adults. It is truly a shame that people in today's society have to place blame on a product, manufacturer and /or distributor to relieve themselves of responsibility. If someone leaves their child in a hot car, is it the car's manufacture's fault? Banning these wonderfully educational items would be as irresponsible as those who would allow their small children to play with them with out educating them first.
Alex Maguire	West Chicago, IL	2012-08-08	They are made for adults for Christ sakes! hell, they aren't even marketed to kids. not only that they provide one hell of a great stress release.
Phillip Good	Jersey shore, PA	2012-08-08	I love bucky balls, they are a great stress reliever on my desk.
Chris Ditty	Collierville, TN	2012-08-08	This is rediculous. Parents should be held responsible for making sure their children know how to play with magnets. It is not the company's fault the parent is lazy and buys a child a toy that clearly states that it is not intended for children.
Robert Dyer	DENVER, CO	2012-08-08	The risk is infinitesimally small compared to other hazards to children. Magnetic sets teach teens and adults about geometric shapes, physics, elemental properties and other important scientific concepts. America is falling behind in the sciences. Banning this teaching tool will further hinder scientific learning.
Dave Zukowski	Phoenix, AZ	2012-08-08	They want to ban magnet because people are building their own small, efficient energy solutions out of them. Big Gov don't wanna lose their share of our hard earnd $$$. It has nothing to do with the kids whatsoever.

Benjamin Wooldrige	Springfield, VA	2012-08-08	With proper training something as deadly as a gun in a child's hand is safe. The same goes for ANYTHING in this world. You will NEVER stop 100% mortality free events/products. Nature doesn't allow for something like that and no matter how hard you try stupidity will always exist. People will forget that they left them on the counter. Undisciplined children will always find a way to subvert their parents. Untrained children of visitors who don't know anything about them will eventually stumble upon them and think they're something you can digest. For the numbers of units sold and the number of cases of accidents when compared to other objects with similar warnings seems insufficient to warrant such an outcry for the halt on production of this product. Guns, cars, balloons, and other child toys that are labeled for older children will and have fallen into the hands of children they weren't supposed to and have caused fatalities and injuries. DO NOT think that this will halt will happen without a large public outcry. This is lunacy.
Robert Carpenter	Chesapeake, VA	2012-08-08	Banning the sale of an item simply because some of the public are too stupid to use it properly is unreasonable.
Josh Olson	Waconia, MN	2012-08-08	The allegations are ridiculous.
Travis Young	Ammon, ID	2012-08-08	I'm a small business owner and find the acts of the Consumer Protection over-reaching at a minimum. What they will do to one, they will do to all.
Jonathan Cooke	Jacksonville, FL	2012-08-08	As a responsible adult, I do not need to be protected by an overly zealous government. As a parent, I am comfortable protecting my children from ingesting objects without Federal assistance. Please, no more Nanny State infringement into my life.
Brad Lawrence	Boston, MA	2012-08-08	Just because a product, used incorrectly/improperly, can cause injuries or fatalities, does not mean it should be banned. We as citizens need more freedoms, not less, and little things like this are slowly eroding away at our freedoms. I feel for the children who have died because of these and their parents but last I checked this is still America. Jack.
Danielle Birlew	Gillette, WY	2012-08-08	They are clearly labeled as not being intended for children. Banning them is just ridiculous.
Christopher Johns	Calhoun, GA	2012-08-09	I have a five month old son and it is MY responsibility to keep objects intended for adult use from my child not the government. These items include cleaners, staples, paper clips, coins, and any other small or biologically harmful objects. If you are going to ban desk magnets which are not intended for children in the first place, you should also ban cleaning supplies, staples, paper clips, and you should ask that the mint stop producing coin money as well.
Steven Imlay	Saint Joseph, MO	2012-08-09	With the real problems facing this country it seems a miscarriage of duty for our ledgislators to waste taxpayer money on this misguided campaign to put these companies out of business. Cary Fleming	Eules, TX	2012-08-09	These are not toys marketed toward children. They are marketed to adults. Any injury to a child is regrettable, but the fault falls on the parents, for not doing their job in keeping their child safe. Don't blame the manufacturers for the parents failure.
Michelle Soper	Smithville, MO	2012-08-09	I am a parent who thinks parental supervision shouldn't be replaced by laws or bans. Adults should have access to merchandise and experiences not intended for children. The product in question is clearly marked for adults only and the manufacturer has gone to great lengths to not market them to children. They should not be penalized because their product is being used in a way it was not intended. If that logic is what is now being used...that nothing can be sold because it "might" harm a child then we should ban all tools, wooden, metal and glass furniture and all cooking utensils...to name a few. This is simply ridiculous and adults everywhere should tell the government we are done having them ban items from adults that are clearly marked for adults only.
Casey Cotita	Salt Lake City, UT	2012-08-09	I'm signing because this is ridiculous to ban a product that is not dangerous and everyone should be allowed to have but keep away from children.

Diego Alejandro	Sunnyvale, CA	2012-08-10	because i have a lot of theses and they are incredibly fun and educational for my kids
Sarah Johnson	Russellville, AR	2012-08-10	"There are many more products that shouldn't be handled by children, and cause far more injuries that CPSC doesn't take issue with. Just as is the case with firearms, swimming pools, and balloons, the solution to the safety problem is education and not prohibition." This sums up quite a bit of how I feel about this. I also feel that it is not the government's job to regulate my safety. Also, they come with warning labels and parents NEED to watch their children.
Andrew Seeger	Clinton, WI	2012-08-10	People should be responsible enough to keep these away from small children & pets -- just like they should with nails, screws, and plenty of other small items!
Doug Benson	Lancaster, OH	2012-08-10	Banning products that bring people stress release, joy, and helps inspire creativity is NO replacement for responsibility and proper parenting.
Nicholas Cripps	London, United Kingdom	2012-08-10	Zen magnets are essential materials in a fun, relaxing and beautiful art form. Balloons are far more dangerous as is paint but, you're not banning them. Alcohol, motor vehicles and guns are all far far far more dangerous but, they are all sold to adults in the USA. Banning magnets is completely arbitrary, counter productive and will just lead to them being sold from outside the USA.

Andrew Holaway	Frederick, MD	2012-08-10	Because magnetic balls are a great stress reliever and brain game for adults to enjoy. We shouldn't blame the product when a parent or child misuses the product. especially when the warning labels clearly state what is dangerous about the product. These are to be enjoyed by responsible adults.
Dan O	Austin, TX	2012-08-10	If the concern is injuries to children, you may ban magnetic products once glass products are likewise banned.
Evan Thomas	Santa Monica, CA	2012-08-10	While I appreciate the very real danger associated with swallowing small magnets, banning this product altogether is an extreme over-reaction, and infringement of basic freedom.
Trent Andrews	Rentz, GA	2012-08-11	Why does the government even CARE about buckyballs?... What did obama hit his self in the eye with one and and say, "Oww, crap that hurt... I shall rid these little overly-fun abominations from my land... here that Bucky-balls, you should have made these little shiny monsters love. Mwa, more... you shall perish." How has he not been shot yet, but Regan has?
Jay Strid	Renton, WA	2012-08-11	I love Zen Magnets and Buckyballs, and this blanket ban on them is ridiculous and unfair. How many people get hurt because they step on lego and trip? I haven't seen a ban on lego, so why are these getting so much hate?
Pavel Anni	Alpharetta, GA	2012-08-11	Magnets are a great educational tool and they spark kids' interest in science.
Erik Ruser	Brooklyn Park, MN	2012-08-11	If a product marketed and sold exclusively to adults, containing numerous warnings on the product and its packaging stating that it is only intended for adults and is dangerous for children, gets in to the hands of a child who then injures themselves on the product, is the manufacturer or seller of the product legally liable? Is a recall warranted even though the injury occurred due to a direct violation of the displayed warning rather than within the intended use of the product such as with most product recalls? If so, do any product warnings protect the manufacturers of inherently dangerous products from liability and forced recall? Dangerous precedent in my opinion.
Victoria Arnold	Wichita, KS	2012-08-11	I believe when an adult buys this product to use for themselves and they have little children around,then it is their responsibility to not let that child get into the product and cause harm to his/herself. It's is not the manufactures or sellers responsibility to watch over your kids. Be responsible please. As to the goverment trying to take a product out of my hands which i enjoy playing with,i say hey stop interferring and let me have my fun.
Pamela Johns	Resaca, GA	2012-08-12	Government is trying to take away our God given ability to think for ourselves. It is my responsibility to protect my family in my own home~not theirs!

Carl Herold	Kingston, NY	2012-08-12	I thought this was a joke. This is absolutely ludicrous and whoever is in charge at the CPSC needs to be fired, asap. Gabriel Worstell	Milwaukie, OR	2012-08-12	This is one of the most ridiculous things I have ever heard. It's this kind of blatant, narrow-minded double standard that makes me ashamed to call myself an American. Why the hell does the CPSC care so damned much about magnets when so many other products, ones marketed specifically to children, are so much more of a threat and left to their internal methods of safety regulation? This is idiocy, plain and simple.
Will Gardner	PORTLAND, OR	2012-08-12	This imposing ban appears to be nothing more than a knee jerk reaction. Won't someone not think about the little kids? Honestly, I can buy bullets off the shelf, but magnets are bad? You look foolish and I will contact my Senator and Rep. if this ban becomes official.
Kat Warzek	San Jose, CA	2012-08-12	I find the magnets therapeutic as a collegiate student, and in terms of risk and danger to children other objects produce a significantly larger risk- this is a waste of tax dollars and offensive to my rights to own magnets as an adult.
Nik Brodeur	Springfield, MA	2012-08-12	I don't believe in eugenics, but you're pretty stupid if you eat a magnet. They don't even taste good, nothing like cookies or whatever. You're a moron if you eat magnets and at the very least deserve some gastrointestinal pain.
John Patton	Bartlett, IL	2012-08-12	I think this is too draconian considering the risks.
Samuel Hanig	Cleveland, OH	2012-08-12	I Think magnetic sphere's are a great toy for children and adults alike. When used with appropriate adult supervision, these toys can provide endless hours of imagination stimulating entertainment for children. Stimulating the imaginations of children at any age will only benefit their long term health. As an adult, I know how to safely use toys . Please withdraw your ban.
Alex Fish	QUEENSBURY, NY	2012-08-12	Prohibition and tight regulation has time and time again to have proven unsuccessful. To employ such methods to such a harmless and beautiful product will only further decrease the effectiveness of these rules. It should be apparent to any official opposing this product that the public majority, as far as I've seen on the internet, widely supports the continued manufacturing and distribution of magnetic spheres. This is a shortcoming of all people to be blinded by their own biases based on what little information they possess. Officials should be able to place aside such prejudices aside when they make the decision of many. I will be writing an essay to Kirsten Gillibrand on this very soon in the hopes to not only persuade her against this example of prohibition, and hope that this could improve future decision-making. I advise as many of you to do the same, and send them to officials who support this prohibition.
Roberts Brown	Duvall, WA	2012-08-12	Magnets are truly fun and interesting things.
greg carrington	CHICAGO, IL	2012-08-12	It is not the role of the government to determine if a potentially dangerous item to be allowed. it is the governments job to investigate and regulate its distribution to consenting adults at their own discretion ensuring that said adult is aware of all the risks and circumstances which could be resonably considered high risk. As a legal Adult it is the responsibility of said adult to eductate and familiarize themselves with the risks of any situation and then decide whether to undergo said risk. it is merely the governments responsibility to make an adult aware of said risks. I understand restriction of sale to minors but deciding what i can and cannot. access as an adult is an unacceptable limitation of my freedom as an American citizen.

Ryan Standley	Kinston, NC	2012-08-12	Dear New York Senator Kirsten Gillibrand, You wish for a "Ban on Sale of Dangerous High-Powered Toy Magnets" for several reasons, most, all of which are either not relevant, unreasonable, or outright wrong. Children are not the meant to be handling the magnets. The power invested in you given through your position as Senator should be used to fix greater problems. Furthermore this could be classified as restriction of the free market. Your desire to ban the sale of magnet spheres will ultimately not achieve the desired affect, will cause general frustration amongst the masses, and could be classified as restriction of basic American rights. Zen Magnets are not meant for children. They do not market to children, in fact they go out of their way to avoid marketing to children. They ensure that their products are not grouped with toys, but rather as a scientific or spiritual novelty. On your website you said "Since 2010, there have been at least 43 incidents of children and toddlers who accidentally swallowed these magnets, according to the CPSC, with an increase in incidents each year. In 2005, a 20-month-old boy died after he swallowed nine magnets." The 20-month-old boy swallowed nine magnets resulting in death. The boy did not buy the magnets and assume any risks involved, the parents did, and it was their fault he had access to the magnets, and must have been left unattended to have enough time to swallow nine. If your familiar with the stages of grief, the first, denial, also involves refusing any responsibility and i belief this was the case. However bad it may sound, the parents, or whoever caused this accident did not want to admit to them self that they caused the untimely death of a child, and instead sought to vindicate their actions by accusing the manufacturer. Your website continues..." In March of this year, a 3-year-old girl in Oregon swallowed 37 high-powered Buckyballs magnets, which tore at least three holes in her lower intestines and another in her stomach. When accidentally swallowed, these small "rare earth" or "neodymium" magnets can twist intestines, causing bowel ulcerations, intestinal damage, blood poisoning and even death." This case is very similar to the first, why was this young girl left to play with the obviously small and swallowable magnets. Small children are know for putting anything and everything in their mouth, and the parents should have known that. Overall, while the children of course cannot be held responsible, the companies that make the magnets have clear warnings, and thus should not be held responsible either. The parents need to accept responsibility for their children, as they do with other aspects of their life. Parents do not sue the companies that make electrical outlets because they let their child put a fork in one. Along the same thought train, your power as a Senator could be put to better use. There are literally thousands of ways children die ever year, and while I may sound cynical in saying this, your statistic, "Since 2010, At Least 43 Children Have Ingested High-Powered Magnets, Causing Severe Stomach and Intestinal Damage" is not very significant. That equates to a little more than 20 a year, not all of which dying, but only sustaining "Severe Stomach and Intestinal Damage". Even if all 20 died in one year, 115 children died from September 2010 to August 2011 from flu. Flu is widespread and is statistically causing more problems, so why not help with that? I find it not only frustrating but incredibly disheartening that the people in power are fretting over such trivial problems. Here in America, we enjoy a host of liberties that many fought and died for. One that separates us from many other countries is the ability to do whatever you want with your life. You can have an idea, and work for yourself, driven by passion and sheer will to not fail, create a product or service. If the general population likes it, you will succeed. This is basic capitalism. By trying to restrict what people can sell, you are restricting capitalism. If we start completely banning things because some people get injured because they use them improperly, everything would get banned. If you try to eat a soda can you can die, if you reach into a blender thats turned on you can get injured, if you swallow batteries you can die, yet no one stops the sale of these items. Just because something is more of a novelty than an item that makes life easier or more pleasant, it does not mean it should be more vulnerable to these frivolous claims. Again, on your website, it says "This is a good first step to help prevent these dangerous magnets from ending up in hands and mouths of children," said Senator Gillibrand. "Every parent wants to keep their child safe and this unsuspecting product has already caused too much harm and put too many children's lives at grave risk. We must take further action to stop these dangerous toys from reaching any more homes and stores." Are you aware that cigarettes can be given to children lawfully? Why are you not fighting to ban the sale of cigarette because they cause eventual cancer and death in children? The law says that cigarettes cannot be sold to anyone under 18, but if police see a 5-year-old smoking, they can do nothing about it. I feel an item like that should be #1 on the agenda, not fretting over irresponsible parents giving young children small magnets. In conclusion, you should stop your support of banning the sale of magnetic spheres to pursue more important issues. The actions you support would be better implemented for other things. You should use your power to spread awareness of more severe problems. You should not limit the freedom of Shihan Qu and others trying to make a living by exercising their capitalistic rights. Sincerely, Ryan Standley

Sergey Grabkovsky	Stoughton, MA	2012-08-12	Banning magnets for all in order to do the same as could be done by responsible parenting is stupid. I have these magnets and they're awesome. I make cool stuff with them. If you ban these, you might as well ban every other small possible choking hazard. TL;DR: I don't want to live on this planet anymore.
matt S	raleigh, NC	2012-08-12	Zen magnets keep me calm and prevent murderous rampages.
Jason Wong	Davis, CA	2012-08-12	When the consumer fails to adhere to the warning label, it is not the vendors fault
Rachel Johnson	Winchester, VA	2012-08-12	Children can swallow anything. It's up to the parents to protect their child. I don't see anyone outlawing pushpins. The ingestion warning is there for a reason. Where did common sense go??
Patricia Baker	Centreville, VA	2012-08-12	I love the Buckyballs I bought for my son.. They are educational and therapeutic. We do not need more regulations. Parents can keep small objects from small children. It is a waste of time and Federal tax dollars to put regulations on such a great product.
Salman Hendershot	Redding, CA	2012-08-12	3 reasons: One, It's an unfair or out of proportion punishment. Two, I have and enjoy the product and wish to have the option to buy more in the future. Three, That federal organization is supposed to regulate, not ban things. Or at least not ban them unless there is a major problem, which there isn't with this product.
Raven Wheeler	Kindersley No 290, Canada	2012-08-12	Because getting rid of these amazing balls is stupid because a few kids happened to put them in their mouth.

David Zadeh	LOS ANGELES, CA	2012-08-12	So i bought a pair of these about 3 months ago and since I got them i have been playing with them all the time and I even decided to buy the travel size right after. I have always had a love for magnets and i am pretty creative so making things with these balls are possibly one of the coolest things ever for me. I pretty much keep the travel pack in my pocket all the time and whenever I'm bored or waiting for something i just take them out and play with them. Also i honestly use them like a stress ball because whenever i squeeze an actual stress ball it usually annoys me more than helps me, but with these magnets it's different because they take form of me squeezing it and it actually works to release stress. So here is a little information about me, I'm 22 years old and i have a 5 year old brother. He loves to watch me play with these magnets but i have made it a point that he is completely restricted from touching these magnets so he doesn't even though he wants to really badly. Honestly it is not the companies fault for the unfortunate deaths/sicknesses. When i got my magnets i saw at least 3 warnings that say "KEEP AWAY FROM ALL CHILDREN!" And they stated the fact that you should not swallow these or let children use them because it can possibly kill them. So thus far i purchased the travel pack and i got the slandered pack of 216 magnets and i was just looking to buy one of the big packs because these are so much fun but i can't because of the unfortunate circumstances. Please do not ban these because they are possibly the coolest and most entertaining toys ever and whenever people see me playing with them it always interests them people and some of them have gone and bought a set for themselves and I know many others that want to buy a set but cant. Please please please do not ban this toy.
Joel Kain	Brooklyn, NY	2012-08-13	magnets are not worse than knives, cars, air planes, boats, camping, hiking, jogging, biking..... that kids get killed or injured by adults making bad decisions, its obviously not cars, planes..... that are the problem, the problem is either the careless, reckless or uneducated decisions that caused the death or injury, the same applies to magnets. For carelessness or recklessness no law can help, but if its the uneducated decision that caused the injury then just like you won't hand a kid a knife since you understand the consequences, the same understanding of the consequences is needed for magnets, in other words education, not banning.

Justin Nepa	Cordova, TN	2012-08-13	Dear CPSC Commissioners, I'm writing to you to retract the administrative complaints against Maxfield & Oberton and Zen Magnets, and stop the retail stop-sale requests of magnet spheres in the US. These requests have already put two of the largest six magnet sphere companies out of business, are threatening an entire industry, impede the freedoms of all Americans, and endanger a beautiful medium of art. A retail prohibition of magnet spheres is not the proper reaction to the misuse of high powered magnets. A broken product should be taken off the shelves, but magnet spheres are not defective, and do not need to be taken off the market. They just need to be out of childrens mouths. Consumer safety is an important duty, and it is truly regrettable that despite product warnings, there has been two dozen injuries due to child ingestion out of the millions of magnet sphere sets sold in the past three years. However, just as is the case with firearms, swimming pools, and balloons, the solution to the safety problem is education and not prohibition or intimidation. Federal regulation ASTM F963 clearly states that magnets must be labeled 8+ for strong magnetic science kits, and 14+ for strong magnetic toys. All magnet sphere manufacturers already comply with this regulation. The CPSC's assertion of hazard against the magnet sphere industry is also inconsistent with other existing dangers. For example, 100,000 trampoline injuries will require an ER visit in the United States, and 30 children a year drown in buckets. I am calling for the public reversal of requests made by the CPSC to remove magnet spheres from the retail market. When it comes to product safety, every one of the links is responsible: companies, parents, children. Sincerely, Justin Nepa
Charles Killmer	St Cloud, MN	2012-08-13	I also sent a Consumer Product report to CPSC about cigarettes. :)
Edwin Anderson	fiskdale, MA	2012-08-13	Less dangerous than oxycontin. Perhaps require childproof containers? Much more sensible than banning for a 0.00048% chance of injury!

Karen Bultman	Fayetteville, GA	2012-08-13	I am an adult. I do not swallow items that cannot be digested. I do not have children and I do not have pets. If I did, it would be my job as a parent to make sure that they do not swallow items that cannot be digested. At the very least, put an age limit on the purchase of this item. I am tired of the government telling me what I can and cannot do within reason.
Andrea Fueguel	miami, FL	2012-08-13	Banning them is the most hypocritical thing since the alcohol prohibition. If people don't want their kid's dying, stop leaving small things around the house. Don't ban a perfectly good company because of a few stupid adults.

Idle hands are the devils playground. I did let my 8yo niece play with them under my supervision, I said to her, don't ever put them in your mouth.. She said to me "Eww, why would I do that?" She then proceeded to make a great statue with them (better than anything I have made.) This artistic expression may never be allowed again if these magnets are banned. Ridiculousness! Responsibility is the issue here, not the magnets! If you take away magnets based on poor responsibility of STUPID PEOPLE then you may as well take away Freedom. Stupidity is Rampant across the world I refuse to continuously be penalized because of the stupidity others! THIS MUST STOP NOW! Lets start a movement to disband the CPSC. The lack of rational thinking and/or neglect are the real culprit.
Harvey Fagler	Thornton, CO	2012-08-15	Parents need to take responsibility for the actions they allow their children. This is america or was. why is the government trying to control small business, who is funding this on the big corp side to knock out the little guys.

Justin Jiron	Denver, CO	2012-08-15	It is not the toy's fault for any injury.. the responsibility is the PARENTS ONLY. If the parent was supervising their children correctly then NOTHING should go in their mouths. You cant legislate a child into safety, while removing all parental accountability.
Amanda Gilles	Eau Claire, WI	2012-08-15	Please leave parenting to the actual parents. Banning magnetic spheres because parents are allowing access to children that are too young to play with them is a serious misuse of government legislature.
Erik Sundberg	Wylie, TX	2012-08-15	I have two boys under 4 and as a responsible adult I know better than to allow either to play with these adult toys. p l	aurora, CO	2012-08-15	these magnets are so useful. they are a wonderful tool. i attach them to my screwdrivers to magnetize it. it helps me pick up the smallest screws that comes off of cellphones. . its ridiculous how the government is trying to ban it. its the parents fault for giving it to their children to play with! if a bunch of kids started eating dimes and pennys. would the government ban that as well? those 1700 people that got hospitalized for consuming the little magnets, yes i feel bad for them. but at the same time, you shouldnt be putting metal objects anywhere near your mouth.
Kathy McLucas	Northglenn, CO	2012-08-15	I'm tired of government nannyism - it's the responsible adult's job to keep dangerous items away from children. It's also a fun work-desk item and I enjoy them as a pastime.

George Shaw	San Ramon, CA	2012-08-15	The safety of children is the responsibility of their parents, not any government agency. Jesse Bolatto	Arlington, VA	2012-08-15	I am signing this petition, because I do not want to lose my ability to purchase magnetic spheres. I do not have children, do not plan on having children and will not be giving my magnetic spheres to children. But I am being limited, due to the irresponsibility of parents or due to accidents that can occur. Accidents happen all the time related to nearly every product known to man, yet we do not ban every product that has ever killed a child. Thank you.
Jason Martin	Here, CA	2012-08-15	Over regulation is killing the usa
Fateh Khalsa	Espanola, NM	2012-08-15	Completely banning a product is never the solution to something - adequate regulation and education is. Just like The Prohibition ended up being a bad idea, this one definitely is. Many, many more children are injured or killed by trampolines, balloons, wheeled vehicles (bikes, skateboards, etc), buckets, and many other things all of which ARE marketed towards children - and yet the CPSC has (rightfully) realized that it would be ridiculous to try and actually ban people from buying and selling these things. So why are they actively trying to kill an industry that does NOT market to children, DOES include more than adequate warning labels with the products, and actually has SEVERAL sites dedicated to the education and safety regarding these products?
eric hummel	abilene, TX	2012-08-16	I think it is idiotic and ignorant of the CPSC to punish the many for the few parents that do not have very good parenting skills.
Kerry Zimmerman	Long Beach, CA	2012-08-16	I am a 63-year-old man, and I should be allowed to buy this product. ZEN magnets makes the product puts the proper warnings on and should be allowed to continue selling.

Abraham San Emeterio	Miami, FL	2012-08-17	i like zen magnets
Brian Jones II	Griffith, IN	2012-08-17	Despite the accidents from the children that played with the Zen Magnets, that shouldn't be a reason to ban them though. Jason Miller	Perryville, MO	2012-08-17	The CPSC would have to ban all rare earth magnets small enough to swallow for this to make any sense. Instead they are focusing on a popular product that is meant for adults, because some of the adults who buy this product could be stupid enough to give them to children despite the abundant warnings plastered all over the products. Some people in this country may be too thick in the head to understand that these are not toys intended for children, but those are probably the same morons that have loaded guns and a drawer full of sharp knives where children can access them. The whole reason our fore fathers came to this country and succeeded from Great Britain is for freedom. The majority of us are intelligent enough to conduct our lives without a babysitter. The government needs to be shown where the line is in no uncertain terms. I know that this may be an insignificant product, but with the economy in its current state the government has no place shutting down a business because a few consumers are too stupid to properly use their product. If the government outlawed a product because consumers where not competent enough to use the products they bought, every computer company, including Apple, would be shutting their doors.
Jacob Pedersen	Joliet, IL	2012-08-17	The right to buy magnets should not be stripped of citizens in a free country simply because parents cannot be bothered to abide by sensible age guidelines and/or to bother to make sure children do not have access to magnets that they are not old enough to use or understand the dangers of. Refusal to take personal responsibility for parenting a child should not reflect badly upon companies producing a perfectly safe product when used as directed. It would be the same as banning bleach because a parent allowed their kids to play with it and they drank it.

Alice Martin	Irvine, CA	2012-08-17	Magnets are an important part of science education, and this type of regulation is impacting a lot of other great products that children, parents and teachers have benefited from for years.
Mahmood Miah	Seattle, WA	2012-08-17	Magnet toys are safe and fun for anyone who has enough sense to read the warning label. I feel that it is patently unAmerican to be banned from purchasing a safe toy because irresponsible parents can't seem to understand that they need to monitor their children when they play with small objects that can be swallowed. What will be next? Banning Legos because they're sharp and can cause intestinal damage when swallowed?
Jaime Kugelberg	Redding, CA	2012-08-18	As an artist I can use magnets in sculpture, in mini/figure modeling I can use them for modular pieces. This is ridiculous, another case of the government stepping in where it's not needed. We can't prevent EVERY child fatality, it's an impossibility, children are intriguing creatures, intrinsically interested in the world around them. I feel these would provide a greater VALUE to our society in terms of a learning tool than something that needs to be banned for errant fears of physical harm. People need to supervise their own children, the government doesn't need to step in to protect us from ourselves. This is such a minor issue, the government really need focus elsewhere. How about school food programs, pop-tarts, cheetos, chocolate milk, sugary cereals? These are all marketed as "healthy" in some capacity yet all contribute to childhood obesity. 12.5 million children are obese. Let's refocus our attention to issues that matter.
Jessica Campbell	San Diego, CA	2012-08-18	Because the government regulators shouldn't be using tax dollars to ban something that is statistically safer than hundreds of other products on the market (also not for children). Also, can we please stop caving to the insurance companies and their worst-first mentality?
Alberto Verdugo	Santiago, Chile	2012-08-18	I want to test the magnets! i can't test them if the government deletes magnets!
Byron Green	Snellville, GA	2012-08-18	How could u ban something like magnets is that really what taxes dollars are spent on now is that even worth it and its not like its killing people left and right it kills almost the smallest amount of people
Cyril Hicks	Pasadena, CA	2012-08-18	Parents should be responsible for what comes into their house and what their kids eat, not the government.
Loretta Williams	WILMINGTON, DE	2012-08-18	I like magnets more than kids.
Henry Chu	Houston, TX	2012-08-18	The CPSC should stay out of this, if they want to protect the children they should go after the stupid adults that let the magnets get out of their hands.
Kevin Loo	Alamo, CA	2012-08-18	They are fun and are not dangerous. Good amount of magnets can keep blood flowing good
Kaspar Baechi	Zürich, Switzerland	2012-08-18	The sheer hypocrisy of this banning attempt is hair-raising: massacres costing dozens of lives are ok, firearms are not a problem, but magnets are? This is unbelievable!
Michael Tremblay	Vanceboro, NC	2012-08-18	Magnets are awesome and no more dangerous than the poisons we buy everyday to clean our houses. We don't feed them to our children. Also every magnet set I ever bought came with warnings galore that I had to agree to before purchasing. This is America and people need to learn to be responsible for themselves and not have to rely on the state to protect them from their own stupidity.

sherry garris	vanceboro, NC	2012-08-18	Magnets are no more dangerous than other kids stores that are sold everyday. Until they outlaw every trampoline, legos, model sets (with toxic glues and paints) etc... how can they tell us as Americans that we cannot purchase magnets? If people would police their own homes instead of having the government do it for them, we would have a free country not the police state that its becoming.
Todd Volz	Cumming, IA	2012-08-18	Just because a product can hurt someone, doesn't mean it gets to be banned...
connor simpson	montreal, Canada	2012-08-18	Because magnets are fun, and I shouldn't have to suffer because some dumbass kid doesn't know you're not supposed to eat magnets.
Fuchsia Shier	Victoria, Canada	2012-08-18	Adults should have the right to buy adult toys!
Brit Smith	Belgrade, ME	2012-08-18	"I BELIEVE in America!!!" Until we get regime change in January, you folks at the CPSC have to dig deep and find the common sense not to do things like this!!!
victoria mangano	Hopkinton, MA	2012-08-18	because a fun adult toy shouldn't be banned due to poor parenting.
Fernando Pena Torres	Rockford, IL	2012-08-18	If used as explained on the website and follow the warnings, it's a safe adult toy, I have two children a one year old and a three year old and they are not even aware I have this magnets, they are way out of their reach and when I do play with them my children are not present and before I even put them away I count every single one of them by making a figure where if even one of them is missing I know right away. So it would be unfair that only because somebody didn't follow the warnings we all get punished for their stupidities Thank you
Brigina Blanton	Arlington, TX	2012-08-19	Not every household in America has minor children or even pets. Let adults make their own choices, and if a child gets hurt- That's the parents fault for not teaching them proper etiquette!
Blake Thornton	Winston Salem, NC	2012-08-19	The government shouldn't be able to ban products because people are too stupid to safe with them.
tammy pruse	pace, FL	2012-08-19	My son who is 12, loves zen magnets. We have kids of all ages play with them and they know the rules. Please don't ban zen magnets.
Philip Kirkpatrick	Newport Beach, CA	2012-08-19	These magnets are so much fun to play with it would be disappointing if they were no longer available just because some people are responsible with them.
Marcos Pereda	Miami, FL	2012-08-19	Because I have never had the opportunity to Have used zen magnets, and I wish I did, Hopefully I will be and one day I can use zen magnets and build whatever I can, Maybe decorate. Or even Make a little house, MAGNETS SHOULD NOT BE BANNED! I have used zen magnets once in my life but I think this is just unfair and not cool. The government should be concerned about other things and not fun, I'd rather die than lose zen magnets, I wish I could buy one but times are tough, I hope this gets noticed and someone does something about it.
Michael Remollino	Northridge, CA	2012-08-19	Because banning ignorance and stupidity is too hard, let's just ban everything else?!

Bryan Dixon	Boulder, CO	2012-08-19	I understand the risk these pose to health if not handled properly; however, there are many things that fall into this category that aren't suffering the same troubles. They come with warning labels and are not marketed to kids, if you make the mistake of letting kids play with them and not supervise them/explain the dangers then that's the parents problem not the products.
Angel Cortes	honolulu, HI	2012-08-19	Science and education is first.
Dana Radford	Saskatoon, Canada	2012-08-19	The products are clearly marked with warning labels!!!!
Yoon lee	Morgantown, WV	2012-08-19	Sphere magnets are a neat and interesting hobby for many people. and regulatory parts of the government should have the common sense and intelligence to realize that sphere magnets are not a problem.
robert gawlinski	pell lake, WI	2012-08-19	i love magnets
Patrick O'Hare	Woodbury, MN	2012-08-19	I like magnets!
Anne Bougie	De Pere, WI	2012-08-19	I am trying to develop a system to help beekeepers that will use tiny magnets. What can I do if I can't buy them? We don't need the government to do the job parents should be doing. Parents need to be responsible for keeping small things away from their young children. Don't keep them from the rest of us who need affordable parts for our projects.
Lucas Manteuffel	Huntsville, AL	2012-08-19	I personally love to use my magnets. They are fun to build things with, are therapeutic, and give me a sense of satisfaction when i complete a shape. They have never presented a problem to any electronics that I or my friends have, and if the reason for banning is that they are a choking hazard, then don't let small children play with them.
Ronald T. Belanger	Paxton, MA	2012-08-19	It's a stupid ban. Why not ban pins and needles?
Adam Forsgren	Stockholm, Sweden	2012-08-19	Magnets are a great tool for children and adults alike to understand physical phenomena!
Lyndse Gwaelin	Eugene, OR	2012-08-20	This ban is blatantly ridiculous. What's next? Banning bebes? AirSoft ammunition? Plastic bags? Balloons? 15 gallon buckets? These are all dangerous in the hands of unsupervised small children, but none of these are banned.
Arya Eshraghi	Annapolis, MD	2012-08-20	This level and form of regulation is both unfair and ineffective.
jose bernus	New Haven, CT	2012-08-20	I'm tired of government controlling my life with the excuse of being "for the benefit of society". Individual rights NOT "society" rights is what made this country great. Ban by ban, regulation by regulation, government is eating our freedom away.
Justin VonHagen	Jacksonville, FL	2012-08-20	Because it is silly for the government to make products illegal just because they are used wrong.
Karen Barrow	Fort Myers Beach, FL	2012-08-20	There are so many more dangerous products out there. There must be another reason for this ban, something they don't want publicized like health benefits or energy manipulation.

Jake Rodriguez	Anaheim, CA	2012-08-20	When does government control stop? Aren't we, the citizens, the ones who choose the government? They are there to represent us, yet nobody has asked me if I think magnet spheres are dangerous. There is no scientific data that says using a magnet sphere properly is dangerous. Because a few people have misused these products, we must now ban? People, take responsibility for your actions, keep an eye on your children, stop blaming others for your actions. Did you know that you can have a heart attack from drinking too much WATER at once? This has been proven yet I haven't seen any warning labels on packaged water or my faucet. Should we ban and make the water companies liable?
Jim Drury	Spokane, WA	2012-08-20	I am a married professional working in the Information Technology field. I have trouble concentrating for long periods of time if my hands aren't actively engaged. David Ojeda	Crystal City, TX	2012-08-20	I would like to buy this product it, and i believe it will expand the minds creativity skills.
Yulesh Patel	Glen Allen, VA	2012-08-20	This is important to me because I believe that the government has crossed a certain line when trying to serve its citizen. Everyday things such as tobacco, firearms and other harmful devices are purchased in America without proper consideration to whom they may affect. Children are affected by second hand smoke which had been proven to be deadly and provoke asthma, yet tobacco is still legal in the States. Some people buy firearms to protect themselves, others do it for a different reason. Yet the thing they both share is easy access to purchase firearms: citing the unfortunate Virginia Tech Massacre and the Colorado Shootings among many other tragedies. The question we must ask ourselves is why aren't these dangerous items being at the very least restricted when MAGNETS. Anyone can go to ebay and buy a 10lb neodymium magnet, but you do not see anyone dying from those. The reason these children are dying is because of their parents. Parents who either do not educate their children about stuffing things in their mouths and parents who do not properly supervise their children when using these magnets. No one leaves their kids around kitchen knives unless they are old enough to know what they are and what they can do. The government has no business regulating knives and it has no business regulating magnets . It should be holding the PARENTS responsible not bankrupting a company who is trying to have its part of the American Dream selling a product that just needs a bit more Parental Supervision.

Melona McCarthy	Phoenix, AZ	2012-08-21	I find it ridiculous that you are recalling these magnets because someone "might" swallow them. There are so many things that are dangerous if handled incorrectly. Perhaps better warning labels are in need at the most, but to recall an item that if handled correctly poses no threat and enhances peoples minds is preposterous. Please reconsider.
Himal Kooverjee	Johannesburg, South Africa	2012-08-21	I have a passion for these as a hobby and pastime. Also, trying to ban something that has such a minute chance of causing harm WHEN USED IMPROPERLY is just ridiculous.
Eric Bookbinder	Grapevine, TX	2012-08-21	Why prevent everyone from buying something when it is a small subset of the people not using them correctly?
Karl Sickendick	Beavercreek, OH	2012-08-21	This ban is preposterous. Cigarettes are still for sale and we consider banning a toy? These toys already have warnings printed on them. Humans are capable of making their own decisions, and parents are capable of making decisions for their children. Let us make our own decisions.
Matthew Whitcomb	Denver, CO	2012-08-21	Destroying a small business on the pretesx that their product MIGHT cause an injury is simply stupid at best. There are numerous businesses that produce products that MIGHT cause injury IF misused. This is sheer stupidity, go fight a good fight.
Evan Kaiser	Calgary, Canada	2012-08-21	This is very important to me because my magnets are extremely fun to play with and I use them very often with my family and friends. Magnets sell very well and support a healthy economy. There have been NO incidents where magnets have harmed people and I don't see any reason, at all, whatsoever that justifies banning magnets completely. Yes, I admit that harm could be caused by these magnets but that is why there is warning labels and people shouldn't be stupid with them. magnets are fun, so why ban them??
Joshua Gourneau	Nashville, TN	2012-08-21	Science!

Jordin Kare	Seattle, WA	2012-08-22	I'm a Ph.D. astrophysicist and aerospace engineer. I hold over 60 issued patents. Magnets are among the best ways to get people, including children, interested in physics. Sphere magnets in particular combine all sorts of interesting physics and mathematics (geometric shapes, angles, solids) with tactile appeal. Banning magnets is like banning sharp pencils, or banning Legos because they are hard and have sharp corners.

Liliya Trusyuk	Alvarado, TX	2012-08-22	I don't believe they should be banned. They come with a warning label, people shouldn't blame accidents on the product. It can't do anything unless someone moves it. It's not right to take away other people's fun because they had an accident. No ban. Play responsibly.
Donald Hines	alvarado, TX	2012-08-22	Rare Earth Magnets are a fascinating and educational product. It's important to protect our children, but we cant remove all risks without removing everything. Mike deCock	Chandler, AZ	2012-08-22	An outright ban on magnetic spheres because a small minority of children and teens have injured themselves by abusing the product is an inappropriate overreaction. As an adult, I should have the right to choose for myself whether or not I purchase an item that can be harmful when abused. This is the case with thousands of household items and should be the case with magnet spheres.

I have been producing a lot of geometric art with them for quite some time, and it would be a horrible shame for all the US suppliers of these magnets to be put out of business. Zen Magnets in particular is a company whose business I appreciate in particular for providing high-quality beautiful magnets for my art. The danger that these magnets pose has been greatly exaggerated. So long as children are old enough to understand the concept of poison or things which can be harmful to put in one's mouth, they can safely use these. Moreover, they're not just a toy for children, but also a medium for art, a place to explore geometry and group theory, as well as an excellent physical demonstration of the magnetic force. There are many paints, dyes and other chemicals and materials used in the production of art which would be harmful if swallowed, and yet nobody would think to harm the work of artists by banning them from the market. This is comparable to what you are considering doing here. Please reconsider your stance on this issue.

James Southall	Kansas City, MO	2012-08-27	I enjoy this product and don't think it causes any more of a safety hazard than many items on the market. It is NOT the place of the US Government to police what happens to a product AFTER is it sold.
Luis Burgos La Luz	Murrieta, CA	2012-08-27	Great stress reliever and helps occupy my time
Nickholas Miller	Round Lake, IL	2012-08-28	The government is wasting money to ban something as insignificant as "magnetic spheres" when there are numerous other problems that could use that money.
Audrey Reale	Lake Saint Louis, MO	2012-08-28	I don't understand, with the warnings present on the product, the government would need to physically ban magnet spheres. Adults with children should be aware of the danger before purchasing, and an age-restriction ban on purchasing the magnets would make much more sense than a complete ban altogether. As an adult, I certainly know better than to swallow magnets, just like I know better than to swallow a razor blade or glass (not that magnet spheres even fall within the same danger zone). The government should not completely ban the sale of these magnets, but should instead put their efforts toward educating consumers or limiting the sale to adults only.
Nickholas Miller	Round Lake, IL	2012-08-28	I love playing with Zen Magnets and I would hate to see them banned.
Michelle Crabtree	Bozeman, MT	2012-08-28	Love the creative things that can be made by magnets
Andy Racic	Houston, TX	2012-08-28	On the list of things to be banned for the betterment of our nation, this shouldn't even rank, let alone be part of actual legislation.
Jason Kositarut	Forest park, IL	2012-08-28	This ban is ridiculous. What will be banned next? Playgrounds? I'm not normally libertarian in leaning but even I think this goes too far towards the "nanny state". If people can't keep their kids from ingesting these, they should be banned from being parents.
Cory OBrien	Alameda, CA	2012-08-28	Don't use government to make up for bad parenting.
Jason Brough	Gary, IN	2012-08-28	There are many things which, when left unattended, and found and eaten or otherwise interacted with by a toddler, can gravely harm said toddler. Few of these things are banned, because even if humans abandoned civilisation and returned to the trees, there would still be rocks and sharp sticks all over the place.
Greg Saxler	Woodbridge, Canada	2012-08-28	These magnets are not children's toys and are clearly marked as ingestion hazards. Why should access to this product be prohibited when the only hazard is that children might hurt themselves. Knives are also potentiall injurious to stupid children, but no one is trying to ban them. There are a multitude of other products that can harm children but that don't warrant a ban. This is one of those cases. I don't follow the logic of my being unable to acquire these because some people are unable to teach their children not to eat them. Why not ban packing foam too while you're at it, children can choke on that as well.
Aleksandr Milewski	San Jose, CA	2012-08-28	This is an absurd waste of the CPSC's time to protect against an extremely minor hazard. There are warnings with the product, that should be enough.
John Sharretts	Churchville, MD	2012-08-28	These things say not for kids on the side. if a young kid its one its not the fult of the manufacture its the parents fault if the kid is to young or does not know better. If someone ate 2(because you have to eat 2 magnets to be in any danger) and knew not to eat one than that sucks for them. Maybe you should have not be stupid. Plus these things are super fun.

Chris Bloom	reno, NV	2012-08-29	These magnets are fun to play with and stupid people putting them in their mouth should not stop me from enjoying them
Kyle Spitz	Dewitt, MI	2012-08-29	because banning magnets completely from everyone is an outrage, just because an 8 year old can't drive doesn't mean cars should be banned for everyone. A restriction by the government on this level is unnesesary and has insufficient reasoning for the complete and total ban of magnet spheres.
Robert Sexstone	PALMYRA, Australia	2012-08-29	I believe it is my democratic right to purchase goods that are safe when used correctly and almost impossible to be used to harm others. Banning products that are only dangerous through extreme misuse, despite numerous warnings, is a travesty on my human rights.
Katy Dem	Oneco, CT	2012-08-29	Use the product the way it's supposed to be used and you have no problem. You can't protect people from their own stupidity. Cars kill and injure more people than these metal balls, should we ban cars?
Katy Dem	Oneco, CT	2012-08-29	Use the product the way it's supposed to be used and you have no problem. You can't protect people from their own stupidity. Cars kill and injure more people than these metal balls, should we ban cars? Millions of products have warning labels and if you ignore those warnings you are subject to learning lessons the hard way.
KEN STEIERT	PALM SPRINGS, CA	2012-08-29	RIDICULOUS POLITICAL CORRECTNESS GONE AMOK. ANOTHER POTENTIAL LOSS OF FREEDOM!
Alexander Borsi	Eastlake, OH	2012-08-29	All magnets can be eaten if they are smaller than the size of food. Banning a single magnet size/shape is not going to fix the issue.
Julia Shinay	Brooklyn, NY	2012-08-29	I have been saving to get a mandala of zen magnets for months. I am a responsible, artistic adult and If people in this country can buy guns whose sole purpose is to hurt things, I should be able to buy magnets for artistic purposes soley.
Jason Vine	Carmichael, CA	2012-08-30	Ever since I was a child, I've always loved magnets. Seeing magnets taken away would be a tragedy. Especially for learning about magnetic fields.
cody irwin	seattle, WA	2012-08-30	i love the magnets! and they are endless fun.

Brentt Martin	Kealakekua, HI	2012-08-30	Zen Magnets are another on of the worlds finest examples of something that we take time to observe in simple, keen eyes.
Todor Todorov	Montana, Bulgaria	2012-08-30	Because prohibiting such a product that inspire creativity and structural thinking just because some people might be too stupid to handle small objects is just nonsense!

Blake Hargis	San Marcos, CA	2012-08-30	Federal institutions should not ban nor have the power to ban a product outright just because of it's inherent dangers, it needlessly kills an already bleak economy, and runs against the principles of laissez-faire of which this country was founded. It is up to the parents to decide if product is too dangerous for their children, NOT THE GOVERNMENT! Children and teens use bicycles every day. Children and teens play football and ice hockey every day; do we need a federal policy regulating the use of these products? Or worse banned the manufacturing of said products and killing an industry? No. We need responsible government that is held accountable and is transparent and fair in nature. I could understand a warning label and age buying restriction, but a all out ban is unjust and un-American.
darren heppel	denton, TX	2012-08-30	Tired of this country banning our lives. just because a few do harm or are stupid enough to swallow or not watch those too young to play with these items it should not keep the rest of us from expanding our minds.
David Thoren	Pendleton, OR	2012-08-30	People must take personal responsibility. The injuries and deaths are tragic, but blaming the magnet and not those more directly responsible, such as a parent or older sibling. is the wrong approach.
Ezekiah Reis Burgin	Vashon, WA	2012-08-30	These magnets are wonderful. The harm they have caused is miniscule compared to thousands of products and activities that are allowed everyday in the US. Many things are not intended for use by young children, magnetic balls are no different. I want to have the freedom to purchase toys for my (26 year old) self to use, much as I could choose to purchase cigarettes, alcohol, a car, a hammer, a set of steak knives, or any number of things a young child should not have access to. What this campaign sounds like is an attack against something (rarely) dangerous, because other industries are too powerful to go up against. It makes the CPSC look weak and cowardly.
Vasil Petrov	Sofia, Bulgaria	2012-08-30	Because I use magnet balls and I think it's very stupid to stop them from sale only because someone can swallow them!
Elizabeth Harasymiw	Cudahy, WI	2012-08-30	It brings out my creative side when I need inspiration.

doug chevallier	northlake, TX	2012-08-31	they are great fun
Mark Saxler	Vaughan, Canada	2012-08-31	We should teach children about magnets and how they work instead of trying to just get rid of them. It's a sad day when we let one person's ignorance spread to every other child.
Lance Mathis	Ardmore, OK	2012-08-31	It's about freedom. Knives, razors and glass are harmful to kids young enough and adults dumb enough, but they're still legal. It's not a preschool toy, it's an adult office toy.
Zachary Vollen	bemidji, MN	2012-08-31	This is no point in banning magnets because of ingestion. There are several thousands of things children can choke on that aren't magnets. I enjoy zen magnets and will be severely upset if this irrational judgement gets passed.

William Guthe	Knoxville, TN	2012-08-31	these small magnet toys are amazing for the creative adult responsible mind. They help me get through my work day.
Mark Mosher	orlando, FL	2012-08-31	This is one the most absurd waste of my tax dollers i've seen yet! Why is the government going after these small business owners when we have so many other businesses that produce very dangerous products that REALLY cause injuries not under this same threat. I dont want my tax dollars used to take down a small business like this when there's huge companies out there tearing up the environment and nothing is happening to them! Why dont you government types go pick on somebody your own size for a change. Oops,sorry.nobody out there your size. Too big. Never mind.
James Gassler	Shepherdsville, KY	2012-09-01	Seriously, why ban magnets!?! This is getting stupid.
Victor Kogler	Martinez, CA	2012-09-01	I understand and appreciate the mission of the CPSC but there are far more important safety issues for them to address with the time and resources they waste on magnets.

Karl Scott	Hardwick, VT	2012-09-01	This is an irrational attempt to ban a fun and educational product.
patricia shannon-brain	cleburne, TX	2012-09-01	The government is pushing a ban that is drastically inconsistant with the the hazards of other products.
Bryan Mendoza	Norwalk, CT	2012-09-01	Things should not be banned due to a lack of responsibility and/or brain cells. Stupidity of others is not a valid reason to ban magnets or other products.

Patrick Phillips	Statesville, NC	2012-09-01	Because fuck the police.
Greggory Riforgiate	Arroyo Grande, CA	2012-09-02	I feel that there is no danger to people from magnets. The normal user of these magnets will not be liable to swallow these things. I'm bored, I want to play, these are what I want to play with. The majority of people playing with these aren't going to get hurt. so don't take them from us. Issue better warnings and give precautions, but don't take them or degrade them.
Gail Lindemann	Thousand Oaks,, CA	2012-09-02	They are a great way to be creative. A Wonderful and relaxing to have. Also makes a great gift. Lots of things in life need to be cared for as not to make them dangerous, but that doesn't mean we should not be able to have them. Guns aren't banned!!!

PLEASE DON'T DO AWAY WITH THESE, I ALWAYS SEE WARNINGS THAT THEY ARE NOT INTENDED FOR SMALL CHILDREN! AND I WOULD NEVER LET MY CHILDREN PLAY WITH THEM

Freddy Symons	Cardiff, United Kingdom	2012-09-02	Banning these magnets is utterly ridiculous. I sincerely hope they change their mind to the only rational conclusion and spare this beautiful, engaging and challenging product.
Colter Schroer	Niwot, CO	2012-09-02	Zen Magnets are not marketed to children. they are labled as 14 and up meaning that anyone thats under 14 and has those, is not following the manufacturers requests, and that should be blamed on the kids, not the company, and anyone over 14 who's stupid enough to swallow them, should be blamed for it.
Richard Johns	Parkersburg, WV	2012-09-02	Absolutly meaningless ban.
Chrystal Gilliland	Newport News, VA	2012-09-02	Because the product is properly marked, marketed to an age that can think. AND IT'S EDUCATIONAL.
Mishan Golshan	Saratoga, CA	2012-09-02	I play with these every single day and I have enjoyed them for the 4 years that I have had them. I always want more and I believe that only irresponsible parents are the ones to blame instead of the companies who sell them. They are a recreational tool, and they very blatantly explain on every label, box, and website that these are not toys for young children and that they will cause problems if they are ingested.
Jordan Dubois	Manchester, NH	2012-09-03	Because I need them for my education. Help me big time to concentrate.
dan thacker	calgary, Canada	2012-09-03	It is ludicrous of the gov. to impose this pathetic ban.What about the lethal pollutants that have been sanctioned by the powers that be?This is motivated by something other than concern.
Duncan Chappell	Indianola, IA	2012-09-03	I really want some of these, and still haven't gotten a chance to play with any! Zen Magnets has never gotten an injury complaint because they market strictly to adults and make sure that warning labels are clearly seen by all. The fact that the government wants to shut them down is merely further proof that our country is run by morons.

Mark Regets	Rockville, MD	2012-09-05	How many children will grow up at least a little less creative and a little less analytic because they were not allowed to play and experiment with magnetic balls? There are no risk free products. If we try to eliminate all risk, we will be a duller country in more ways than one. As a parent I have already been repeatedly exposed to warning about swallowable objects, and at least a few times was told how bad it would be to swallow 2 magnets. I do not current have magnetic balls and have never been exposed to a specific warning, BUT knowing the other dangers, this is rather obvious.
Adam Misek	Manchester, NH	2012-09-05	Magnets are an inspirational resource for the promotion of innovation.
Samuel Abbott	Tauranga, New Zealand	2012-09-05	Magnet spheres are an amazing artistic medium and with them, even the least artistic person and probably learn a thing or two about geometry. Magnets are a spectacular phenomenon with proven health benifits. There is no logical reason why they should be banned and this should raise a lot of questions as to why CPSC want them banned
Richard Steele	Tauranga, New Zealand	2012-09-05	Because i have seen firsthand accounts of amazing structures being created and hours of entertainment that actually challenges the mind. Beats most video games...

Jordan Dubois	Manchester, NH	2012-09-05	They are very important to my education. They are in my education plan, and have brought my grades up from low B's and C's to straight A's. I owe it all to those little 5mm magnets. And also, banning magnets is the stupidest thing I've ever heard. Why don't they spend their time doing something more important?
Junkang Ong	Singapore, Singapore	2012-09-06	I have not had a chance to buy this and you guys are removing it?! This is so unfair to me and others who wanted to buy this but whose parents don't allow.
Zack Centner	Crescent City, CA	2012-09-06	I was always a lover of magnets. To see the government try and stop a sale of something less dangerous that peanuts is utterly ridiculous and insulting to my intelligence. Do they not understand that if someone dies by ignoring warnings, that it is NOT the retailers fault? This has my full support.

Dan Smith	Eau Claire, WI	2012-09-06	It is ridiculous for the CPSC to demand that products such as Zen Magnets, Bukyballs and others stop being sold. Through this action the CPSC is removing from parents, the responsibility to protect their children from the misuse of an otherwise perfectly safe product.
Derick Rodriguez	Staten Island, NY	2012-09-06	There is no reason to ban something like this just because of a possible danger to children. This is not marketed to children to begin with. May as well ban pencils, pens and the compass due to the possibility of poking someones eye out.
Virgil Schwake	Nekoosa, WI	2012-09-06	I don't believe that a product should be banned from the market to protect the dumb. The warnings seem more than enough, and parents should be at fault. I suppose you would want to ban sales of cars because if in a car accident a child "could be hurt".
Michael Osgood-Graver	Kirkland, WA	2012-09-06	I object to government sensitization of such an innocuous product. The risk to children is clear, but the same is true of countless other objects found in the home. If you want to make the world safer, put more money into scientific education for children and adults alike.
Nitai Benso	Plantation, FL	2012-09-06	Because I think the parents should be responsible for giving their children these high powered magnets, not the companies that specifically label these magnets as not for children. Please DO NOT ban Zen Magnets.
MICHAEL NEUMANN	FARMINGTON HILLS, MI	2012-09-06	Because I use Rare Earth Magnets all the time and the government has no business putting a ban on magnets. If we were to ban everything that could be potentially harmful to children then we would all be living in log cabins with no technology or tools at our disposal whatsoever. The problem here isn't magnets, its irresponsible parents. To bad you cant ban them.
Cristel Davila Guerrero	Mexicali, Mexico	2012-09-06	For the same reasons as any other individualist with ideals, to prove that the complete prohibition of something is not ALWAYS the answer, but to find a way to prevent the consequences, taking actions that far as to ban something its like taking the easiest way...wich is wrong. Also those magneticball toys are a great idea of a desk-toy and the fact taht some have had accidents with it it doesnt mean the toys have all the fault, like a motorcyclist accident is made to blame the motorcycle itself, it doesnt make sence but to see far away from the square details, other etical reasons, the personality, the parents.... etc. Thank You for the attention.
Dylan Spencer	Palmdale, CA	2012-09-06	To paraphrase Mark Twain, this is a lot like banning me from eating a steak because a newborn can't chew it.
Adam Love	New York, NY	2012-09-06	Magnets serve as an excellent educational tool for both math and science. I use them often in teaching and are an indispensable tool in promoting intrest in science and math.

David Grossberg	Seattle, WA	2012-09-07	I don't have kids. I will never have kids. I like experimenting with strong magnets, creating both utility and art. I have nothing I feel I need to add about how ban is unfair, it has been well stated already and I agree with every word.

Andrew Huggins	ashtabula, OH	2012-09-07	you law makers need to stop punishing the responsible for the sake of protecting the foolish
Alan Greenberg	sunrise, FL	2012-09-07	If you think people downright IGNORING warning labels is the company's fault, then you are sadly misguided. If you think just because ZenMagnets and BuckyBalls "LOOK" like toys therefor "SHOULD" be toys is ludicrous. There are plenty of Hustler stores that will prove you wrong that not everything that looks like a childrens toy. IS a childrens toy. How many of your wives have vibrators and toys that are colorful and LOOK like they could be marketed to children? Eggs, finger vibrators, and candy thongs all appeal to children far more than MAGNETS. Idiots.

Paul Pittinger	Warrenville, IL	2012-09-11	This is an over stepping of government intrusion and must be opposed. I'm buying as many as possibly and keeping them new-in-box until my kids are older.
Jed Ashford	San Antonio, TX	2012-09-11	We all play with this at WORK, NO MORE REGULATION! This is America!!
Gary Peter	Pittsburgh, PA	2012-09-11	Comparisons to gun control have been made. However, the CPSC does not control gun. Therefore, allow me a differant sort of reductio ad absurdum. If a child swallows a condom, or if you prefer a rubber glove, they could die. Therefore all condoms must be outlawed. This is ridiculous. You cannot outlaw every object that could kill a child if swallowed. If magnets are to be outlawed then so must Xacto blades and small light bulbs.
Collin Seward	Issaquah, WA	2012-09-11	Let's not punish everyone else for poor mishandling of products... especially ones as cool as magnets.
Ryan sfhafh	New York, NY	2012-09-11	Magnets = Boss
Jared Paulson	rice lake, WI	2012-09-11	artistic talent is being smothered when restrictions like this get put on innocent companies. It is absolutely ridiculous to to take away another medium because of a fear from the result of bad parenting. GROW UP!!!!
Micah Denton	Tazewell, VA	2012-09-11	Because magnet spheres are used for expression, artistic or otherwise. Any and all form of human expression that is in itself not harmful to another is not to be banned. To ban it not only hurts businesses but always restricts our freedoms as US citizens. Above all this is the most idiotic thing I've heard all year.
Matthew Walicke	Sioux Falls, SD	2012-09-12	This is a ludicrous campaign by the CPSC. These aren't for children. They're for adults. If you want to ban products that cause injury to children, ban hotdogs.
Jean Collins	Porterville, CA	2012-09-12	the companies have met the government requirements of poating warnings on package to keep out of reach of childern, now they say thats not enough???
David Kogan	Toronto, Canada	2012-09-12	ZEN MAGNETS ARE AWESOME!
Milo Valenzuela	Tonopah, AZ	2012-09-12	Because they are entertaining and they keep me out of trouble.
Matt Harris	Emporia, VA	2012-09-12	It is human nature, and easy to forthfully point out what is wrong; but it takes a higher path of thinking to see what is right in something.
Mark Hylton	Zionsville, IN	2012-09-12	Government is too interested in being everyone's parent. I understand the need to protect those who are unable to protect themselves, but a knee-jerk over-reaction, as though to prove to others that something is being done, is a thoughtless reaction. If rules or guidelines are appropriate legislation to enact to protect people from mishandling a product, I can accept that. But I don't think that removing a product from the market because is has potential danger is using common sense. Where would you stop?Why is this important to you?

Riley Bialock	Gilmer, TX	2012-09-12	i personally dont have mine yet i just ordered them but they will help out in those boring lechers at school lol. Now the parents need to get off there cell phones and start caring about there kids they dont say for children 2 & older i also use them to make a magnet motor ive been working on but there different from these
Christian Bassler	waxhaw, NC	2012-09-13	These toys are incredibly fun, and only dangerous when misused.
Cara Mangold	Lawton, OK	2012-09-13	Loved the spokesman who said "There are many things on the market that can be dangerous if consumed." Sad, though... it is SO clearly written all over the packaging and their site that these are Not for children, that they are Not toys, etc... I hate that any of this should even be necessary, and it's so discouraging how necessary it is... =/
Anita Twitchell	Yorba Linda, CA	2012-09-13	This is something that parents should be monitoring, not big government. I'm tired of the "nanny state" mentality that the government has taken. People need to be responsible for their own actions and these companies have gone above and beyond for safety. This is not a government issue, it's a parenting issue.
Mike Childs	Plant City, FL	2012-09-13	They are amazing and they allow kids to actually use their brain for fun.
Matthew Mickelsen	Titusville, FL	2012-09-13	I'm sick of the government intruding in places it doesn't belong. We should ban classroom chairs while we're at it because children in all of these public schools lean back and can possibly hurt themselves. We should ban electricity as well. Lots of people are killed by electricity. Regulation of the safety regarding an adult toy is absurd. If children got on an an ATV, does that mean ATVs should be banned? No. The parents are the ones responsible for the behavior of their children and their actions. Why has this country taken a dive into the nanny state? I'm surprised wrapping your body in bubble wrap isn't mandatory nowadays, because who knows, we might fall and scrape our knees. Stop intruding where you don't belong. You are the government. You work for us. You only do what is mandated/required to do in the Constitution. No more. Now, time to go play with my magnets like a FREE citizen of the "freest" nation in the world.
Mina Campos	Wyoming, MI	2012-09-14	Banning magnets doesn't make much sense. They can mean so much more to others than you think.
Cameron Aher	Campbellsburg, KY	2012-09-14	All people deserve fun
Scott Grant	keller, TX	2012-09-14	These magnets are fun adult toys. There are alot of products that are dangerous if not taken care of responsibly. What will be next? Sharp knives!

Todd Calvin	Austin, TX	2012-09-15	It's one of the few presents that my kids continue to play with year after year and brings out their creativity and imagination. This has been especially important for my son who struggles with fine motor skills and math, as building with the magnets has helped him tremendously in both areas.

Carter Nickel	Derrick City, PA	2012-09-18	These forms of magnets act as a stress ball but are much more than that in the fact that they let individuals be creative with billions of options to make out of them.
Jeremiah Brewer	Merrillville, IN	2012-09-18	Magnets are fun....just like sports....people get hurt doing them,Just like any other activity,Get over it.
Brett Beaudette	Winnipeg, Canada	2012-09-18	Magnet spheres are not dangerous. They do not posses an inherent risk unless children are allowed near them, but children have far more to worry about and intelligent, wary consumers will not eat magnets. nor feed them to their children. Any intelligent parent would not allow tiny objects near their children. Do not prohibit fun.

Ryan Rotter	Ann Arbor, MI	2012-09-19	The CPSC is destroying a responsible small business and making the federal government and the president look like fools and bullies.
Emiel Zoleta	Springfield, VA	2012-09-19	This is all nonsense. The CPSC goes after the good things which have killed very very few in years. While other far more dangerous things are still allowed to be sold.
James Price	Belvedere, CA	2012-09-20	Cause they are awesome

Benjamin soerensen	Aarhus, Denmark	2012-09-20	Because i love zen magnets, and i don't know what i would do without them.
Nathan Sanzone-McDowell	DENVER, CO	2012-09-20	One of my favorite toys as a child was a set of magnetic marbles, but I was always frustrated by their weakness, and inability to form complex shapes. Certainly, that set was a lot safer for me to play with as a child, but while child safety in toys is an important issue, there are MANY things that are both dangerous and inappropriate for children to play with. Just because something isn't suitable for children does not justify banning wholesale. And I'm a lot more worried about children (and adults) being injured by vehicles and handguns, then magnets that their parents should not allow them to have in the first place.
Dave Waters	Oklahoma city, OK	2012-09-20	This isn't important enough for the government to be spending this much time and money! Let these businesses thrive.
Keith Schawel	Volo, IL	2012-09-20	Put as many warnings on items as you want, to ban an item that isn't inherently dangerous is asinine.
Amogh Karney	Omaha, NE	2012-09-20	I love these! Stupid kids will be stupid.....
Nicholas Anda	Salinas, CA	2012-09-20	1) I'm not a complete idiot that would swallow these. 2) I'm a Mechanical Engineer that uses these for several design applications because of their lowprice point, small size, and availability.
Alexander Gregory	Waterford, CT	2012-09-20	Magnets can provide hours of entertainment. They can also be used as tools of education. They should not be banned simply because of poor parenting.
Travis Montgomery	Orlando, FL	2012-09-20	Just because some people are too lazy to actually pay attention to their children doesn't mean it's the magnet producer's fault!
James Brashier	Baton Rouge, LA	2012-09-20	Because the government shouldn't be able to ban a product specifically marketed to adults simply because a small minority of the customers are unable to keep the product out of the hands of children.
Leon Owen	Salt Lake City, UT	2012-09-20	Good parents should monitor what their children play with. If you don't want your children to play with these, then don't buy them for them. The government shouldn't be making this kind of decision for the public. Too many toys get pulled from the market due to misuse, ignorance or neglect of stupid people.
AAaron Lee	San Luis Obispo, CA	2012-09-20	MAgnets are fun tools to play with ad learn about magnetism.
David Lehman	Petaluma, CA	2012-09-20	You can buy magnets (much more powerful too) at many different stores. These have very clear warnings that they are for adults and are less dangerous than many other toys/activities out there. Not to mention they are a great learning tool.

Xiangnan Weng	College Park, MD	2012-09-20	Innovative for adults.
Nicholas Richardson	Bozeman, MT	2012-09-20	They are a great educational tool for and should not be banned due to incompetent parenting.
Nathan Yospe	Lake Balboa, CA	2012-09-20	In addition to their entertainment value as a professional desk toy, these are very useful as scientific and mathematical educational aides.
Christopher Kui	Flushing, NY	2012-09-20	Provides fun for kids. The kids that I know that play with these have never swallowed them.
Stephen Garrett	Stratford, CT	2012-09-20	Magnets are a very fun adult toy. It's the responsibility of the adult to make sure it stays in the hands of adults only. An entire product line should not be banned because it may pose a hazard to a child. If we go down this road, the government will need to start banning all hazardous material (e.g. cleaning products). Serious violation of freedom here.
Christian Lindemer	Chicago, IL	2012-09-20	We don't have safety foam covering every 90° corner in our homes, either. There is a limit to reasonable protection. These magnets are not inherently dangerous: we don't need to have everything 100% kid-safe.
Andrew Roth	Hamilton, Canada	2012-09-20	These should be available to adults.
Ryan Quinn	Pittsburgh, PA	2012-09-20	Because this is just idiotic for obvious reasons.
Joseph Allman	williamson, NY	2012-09-20	It just isn't right...
Rafael Meneses	Miami, FL	2012-09-20	We should have the right to purchase what we want. If children are being hurt by this product, then the parents are the ones who need to be better informed.

Natalie Moore	Camarillo, CA	2012-09-20	A matter of basic freedom....
Amber Hulihan	Lehi, UT	2012-09-20	Because they're fun and people who take safety seriously shouldn't have to lose access to a nice thing because others did not take the right precautions. Any object can be come a safety hazard if not used properly. Ban everything!
Jennifer Spadafino	Columbus, OH	2012-09-20	A parent's responsibility is to parent their children. If we created a law regarding everything that could hurt a child, children would never be able to DO ANYTHING, EAT ANYTHING. DRINK ANYTHING... they would not be able to LIVE. This law should not and is not a good replacement for parental supervision.
KRIS SWAIM	ALTA LOMA, CA	2012-09-20	JUST BECAUSE PEOPLE CANNOT READ, DOES NOT MEAN MAGNETS SHOULD BE BANNED.
Stephen Dominguez	New York, NY	2012-09-20	Please don't touch my buckyballs. This product is marketed to adults who know how to handle them just like any other product. Further, it is clearly labeled that these are not toys intended for children. Just leave buckyballs alone, and allow them to continue selling them to adults.
Brett Anderson	Philadelphia, PA	2012-09-21	All manner of things can be dangerous if misused or given to children without supervision. It is ridiculous and unjust to shut down numerous companies, putting people out of work, and denying people the freedom to enjoy these great products because of a small number of incidents caused by people ignoring warnings and common sense.

Michael Pinkiewicz	Parlin, NJ	2012-09-21	Regulating the sale of magnets is not only a waste of time, but an insult to the intelligence of the American public. Yes, accidents will happen. But accidents happen with every day objects like PENNIES every day. You can't ban pennies, which can be just as dangerous if swallowed, can you?
Thomas Nerkowski	Middletown, CT	2012-09-21	These are a perfectly safe Teen to Adult Puzzle and Art product. If you ban these you need to ban matches, lighters, magnetic guitar pickups, magnetic magic tricks, etc. etc. You CAN NOT Child Proof the World. That's a Parent's job.
Jaymik Patel	Garland, TX	2012-09-21	best desk toy i ever had. just because they are used improperly doesn't mean they are defective. should you remember how mc donald's coffee now states that the contents are very hot, you will also remember that they never changed the design of the cup, nor advertise its hazardous content to consumers after being sued.

Jeremy Lovins	Independence, MO	2012-09-21	Because the government is wrong on this one.
Rebekah Hall	Twentynine Palms, United States	2012-09-21	I am a 33-year-old adult. I have owned a set of Buckyballs for a few years (and ordered 4 more sets after I learned of this ridiculous action by the CPSC). I have two cats and currently live with two dogs and my 13-year-old nephew, yet not one of them has ever been hospitalized for magnet ingestion. Why? How have I performed this remarkable feat? By keeping my Buckyballs in a desk drawer. By keeping careful track of them when I have them out, quickly picking them up if they drop, keeping them away from the animals, making sure all are accounted for before putting them back in the drawer. AND by instructing my nephew about not putting non-food items in his mouth, especially magnets. Buckyballs has FIVE warnings on the packaging alone, warnings on their website, warnings on their store displays. The limited number of incidents caused by careless people who don't heed those warnings and/or let children anywhere near an item that is clearly marketed as an ADULT TOY does not warrant a full-on ban of the item. They didn't follow the rules, they are the victims of their own lack of personal responsibility. There is no need to punish Buckyballs or those of us who are responsible magnet owners.
Andrew rittenburg	Blacksburg, VA	2012-09-21	freedom of business enterprise from government high handedness

Erick Schultz	Alamo, CA	2012-09-22	Dear CPSC Commissioners. I'm writing to you to retract the administrative complaints against Maxfield & Oberton and Zen Magnets, and stop the retail stop-sale requests of magnet spheres in the US. These requests have already put two of the largest six magnet sphere companies out of business, are threatening an entire industry, impede the freedoms of all Americans, and endanger a beautiful medium of art. A retail prohibition of magnet spheres is not the proper reaction to the misuse of high powered magnets. A broken product should be taken off the shelves, but magnet spheres are not defective, and do not need to be taken off the market. They just need to be out of childrens mouths. Consumer safety is an important duty, and it is truly regrettable that despite product warnings, there has been two dozen injuries due to child ingestion out of the millions of magnet sphere sets sold in the past three years. However, just as is the case with firearms, swimming pools, and balloons, the solution to the safety problem is education and not prohibition or intimidation. Federal regulation ASTM F963 clearly states that magnets must be labeled 8+ for strong magnetic science kits, and 14+ for strong magnetic toys. All magnet sphere manufacturers already comply with this regulation. The CPSC's assertion of hazard against the magnet sphere industry is also inconsistant with other existing dangers. For example, 100,000 trampoline injuries will require an ER visit in the United States, and 30 children a year drown in buckets. I am calling for the public reversal of requests made by the CPSC to remove magnet spheres from the retail market. When it comes to product safety, every one of the links is responsible: companies, parents, children. Sincerely, Erick Schultz

Kevin Lin	Plano, TX	2012-09-25	I am a teenager and I understand the risk of magnets to humans. As with phones, magnets can cause unreasonable damage to the human body, but I understand the use of magnets as I am researching the objectives of certain magnets, and experimenting to see how they would increase certain genres of productivity. As you can see, magnets also go a long way to help humans. Magnets help cure cancer, increase mech speed, help anatomical production, and can play music!!! They can do odd jobs, lighten gravity, and develop super weapons. Magnets can either boost or fry a mother board, generate or resist electricity, and can help in architectural and mechanical design. Magnets are, was, and is art. Why not kill telephones? It will so much as increase longevity, productivity, and communication. So what's the big deal? If you don't want to stop Apple from making an iPhone 6, then why stop Zen from making the next zen magnet?
Ian Benkov	Deer Park, NY	2012-09-25	Why would you ban something so simple and fun? Because people eat it? It's their fault not the magnets..
jeff martin	Marion Center, PA	2012-09-25	Anything the government wants to ban is something that empowers people. The Government no longer represents the people. Ban the government.

Jay Bonning	Lakewood, OH	2012-09-25	There is already a warning. DO NOT PUT IN YOUR MOUTH. If you cannot read that, or put it in a place where someone who cannot read it that is personal negligence. I don't need that legislated.
Margaret KIRK	Hemet, CA	2012-09-25	The government does not need to be Big Brother. Most people are aware of the dangers of magnets and use them safely. We should not be punished because of a very very small population who do not pay attention or read risks involved or know the risks and misuse them anyways.
Edwin Vranicar	Steelton, PA	2012-09-25	I love these things, and I find them highly entertaining, and they are educational. I do not believe that they should be banned because of irresponsible people buy them for children, which they are not meant for.

Andrew Buckner	Gainesville, GA	2012-09-26	Why is this important to me? Every single one of our rights are being methodically, maliciously, and unknowingly taken away from us one, by one, by one. We need to fight harder than ever for any right we might have left. I am a grown adult. I like using these things as a stress reliever, as a pass time when I'm bored and there is nothing on the tv, as a forum for artistic expression, and a learning tool for geometry and extremely complex geometrical shapes. As I am a grown adult, I don't need any government entity taking away something I enjoy just because 'they' feel like it would be better for my/our child/ren. You know what would be better for our children? If you would stop being so damned greedy, power hungry, and corrupt. Going along with the "the plan", throwing us, illegally and unwillingly, head over heels into a police state and eventually... Well I won't get into that in this forum. Point is, is that if this particular company's product is not on the shelves of stores available for purchase by a child with their allowance money, than that means that only a consenting adult with a credit card will be able to put this product into the hands of a child. Even if the child were to purchase this online without their parents immediate knowledge, they would surely find out at the end of the month when their billing statement comes in the mail. Then it is the decision of said adult again, to let the child keep it or discard of the product for whatever reason the parent deems necessary. If ANY action is warranted, it should be those stated as follows: <ol data-bbox="787 861 1536 1476" style="list-style-type: none"> <li data-bbox="787 861 1536 1121">1. No action should not be directed at this particular company for reasons stated above. Especially since no complaint, injury report, or lawsuit has ever been brought against this company ((Reversed, thats just like the government saying "Just because you don't like the way we do things and the fact that you own a firearm, we, the government, are going to arrest you and throw you into a Fema camp and most likely have you executed. We, the government, have no evidence that you have ever or would ever use your firearm to take part in a conspiracy or scheme to overthrow us, the government, but we feel like we would all be safer if we, the government, went ahead and 'took you off the market' just in case you might get any wild ideas. Better safe than sorry, right?" Same exact principle.)) <li data-bbox="787 1129 1479 1178">2. Have any company who sells variants of this product, take said product off the shelves of retail stores and out of reach of the hands of children and switch to online availability/sales only. <li data-bbox="787 1186 1528 1234">3. Have any store that carries this product put an age limit on the product, similar to how sporting goods stores will not sell a knife to children under a certain age. <li data-bbox="787 1243 1536 1476">4. Require that a choking hazard warning sticker, severe bodily harm warning sticker, etc. be posted on any webstore/site, web/store advertisement, and packaging like countless toy companies have done on their products for years. Things like small toy cars, action figures such as G.I. Joes and Barbie dolls that come with small, sharp, and pointy plastic accessories, brightly candy colored LEGO's (which have sharp corners that can easily tear tissue and lodge into a child's windpipe, stomach, or intestine etc.), and countless other "dangerous" toys. All of which are on, and have been on, unchallenged, the shelves of retail stores across America in full view and reach of our children's hands and wants. Who are you to tell me or any other grown man/woman/couple what would be better for our children "Mr. Wolfson"? They are OUR children. They are not a ward of the state. The American people do NOT want or need you walking all over our GOD GIVEN NATURAL BORN RIGHT to raise our children the way we see fit. You have already done everything you can to molest and override every other one of our other rights. You, nor any other government entity, have any jurisdiction over the way I choose to raise my child or the toys that I deem safe or unsafe for my child to play with. This, and things of the sort, will lead to a much bigger issue pertaining to the fact that the government thinks that they know how to raise the American Public's children better than they do. This will not go over well I promise you. What makes you smarter than me or anyone "Mr. Wolfson"? That you have several years of college and a degree? No. You may have more knowledge of your chosen field of study than I do, but that does NOT make you a smarter individual than many, many Americans including myself. Also, a college degree does NOT make you any more capable of handling MY affairs and the decisions I make pertaining to raising and upbringing of MY child/ren. You are an EXTREMELY pitiful, pathetic, misguided, condescending, IGNORANT individual... "Mr. Wolfson"... (that was a very... conservative list of negative adjectives that apply directly to you..."Mr. Wolfson"...))

Huw Evans	Australia	2012-09-26	I have many sets of Zen Magnets and they are an amazing product. The harms that may be caused by these products are not caused by the magnets, but by the people who eat them.
Ethan Walker	Waco, TX	2012-09-26	Just because parent's don't feel like teaching their own child what not to eat, what not to do, what not to say does not mean that everyone should be punished for those few that do not teach their own child these things.
Ken Fujimoto	Makati, Philippines	2012-09-26	It's important because magnet balls are fun and its not the magnet balls company or whatever because it says 14+ on the box it's their moron parents irresponsibility
james sanchez	Long Beach, CA	2012-09-26	Because bottom line is dangerous things like knives, computer dusters, guns are still sold because it really isnt the manufacturer s responsibility to make sure kids dont swallow them or hurt themselves its parents who let them play with them when theyre too young...
david mercedes	kew gardens, NY	2012-09-27	magnets are my life pointer james	Angeles city, Philippines	2012-09-27	because i vwant this donald wayne blankenship jr	granbury, TX	2012-09-27	I admire the art i have seen performed with these magnets. I don't feel the magnets are not dangerous at all, nor is the manufacturer or the retailer responsible for what consumers do with them. The blame rest entirely with the parents of the affected children and their lack of supervision. Here we have another case of a few ruining things for everyone. Furthermore we dont need the government to treat the american public like children.
Josh Adams	Syracuse, UT	2012-09-27	Because magnet art is something you don't see every and it is way fun you just have to be smart where not to use them. I am against the magnet ban
Manjot Singh	Silver Spring, MD	2012-09-27	Because, I can make a choice. If your kids eat it, it was your choice as a parent to buy them. Don't take away my choices because you make poor decisions.
Nate Eklund	Memphis, TN	2012-09-27	Because the banning of a product marketed for adults as a " desk toy" due to health risks for children is completely unnecessary.
jose-luis rodriguez	orlando, FL	2012-09-27	Our country is turning into a pussy country. I mean, banning little magnetic balls (that are for adults, not children) because idiotic kids swallow them, is just ignorant. I don't see them trying to ban alcohol or prescription meds (both have very high kill counts, both only for adults, both not banned, but both kill kids, hmmm) Anyone else wondering why our government doesn't want to ban those and other more deadly items that kids kill themselves with everyday? ooh but Bucky balls!! OMG!!! RUUUNNN!!! THEY'RE SO TINY I MIGHT SWALLOW ONE!!! I should run into my car with some alcohol and go 60 MPH, you know, cause buckyballs are so dangerous.
Gaylon Dew	Beggs, OK	2012-09-27	this isn't about a dangerous product. it's about common sense.
Matthew Edwards	Spanish Fork, UT	2012-09-27	Mainly because I'm against government overreach. This is a clear example of a government agency acting outside its proper role.
David Lee	Moreland, GA	2012-09-27	These magnets are not just used for curiosity purposes. They have uses in industry and education. When handled responsibly, these are no more dangerous than many other common educational tools.
Devin Smith	Portland, OR	2012-09-28	I really believe that banning a product like this is the wrong course of action. Regulation and education is definitely an excellent idea and a necessary step to making sure these magnets are good purchases for everyone who decides to buy and teh purchases are made responsibly. but it is simply not possible to remove every hazardous-upon-ingestion product or object or substance from the world, and it's a reactionary and arbitrary move.

Ross Purvine	Beverly Hills, CA	2012-09-30	The cycles are repeated over and over. The people are abandoned by their governments and so must fend for themselves within situations of less and less available necessities and more and more regulations. Not a pretty picture to behold. So—what now?

Jonathan Bayliss	Brighton, Canada	2012-09-30	I am very creative and have ADD and these things help me get work done and when i'm not working bring out my creativity with the endless possibilities.....and as an adult toy you have to be pretty stupid to eat them....

adam abedrabbo	Avon, OH	2012-10-01	This is important to me because it can help me with a lot of issues and when people have stress on them they can just whip out zen magnets to ease the stress and another reason why is because if the website clearly states do not eat but some one did thats their fault

Daniel Graham	Colorado Springs, CO	2012-10-03	I've been using magnetic spheres (zen magnets) for years for fun and stress relief. In that time I've had a son who is now almost 2 years old. As any good parent I've kept anything dangerous away from him and keep a close eye on him. He's safe, and healthy, and I still enjoy my magnets. When he's old enough I'll let him play with the magnets while supervised. Never should the liberties of the responsible be tread upon by those who do not know how to act responsibly. Making magnetic sphere "toys" illegal for over a few incidents of choking would be about the same as making cars illegal because of a few automotive accidents. It simply doesn't make any sense to do so.
mathew stumpf	Pierz, MN	2012-10-04	i love these magnets they are about the only thing that can keep my adhd occupied.
mathew stumpf	Pierz, MN	2012-10-04	they dont even sell these magnets to any one under 14 where i live. so whats the thought here? that a young kid is going to have his/her parents buy him/her magnets like this just to eat them? it is absolutly ridiculous.

Eric Sturgis	Tacoma, WA	2012-10-04	I grew up with toys like this, I still have them. My parents told me not to eat them, and I did not. We should not police everything and everyone due to lazy parents. Cars are more do more harm to kids than these things
Oleg Yardas	Falls church, VA	2012-10-04	I LOVE my zen magnets and I love this buisness, and I want more people to love them too. It's not right to destroy someone's way of life, the way they survive. without a very good reason. SAVE THE MAGNET BALLS!!!

Carl Holmquist	Stockholm, Sweden	2012-10-08	I like magnets. I don't think its up to the government to prohibit magnets. Orlando Salvato	MALVERN, PA	2012-10-09	You can buy bleach and ammonia but not magnets? What's wrong with these people!?!?
Skyler Pike	bluefield, WV	2012-10-09	Because I believe in the responsible consumer. People are responsible for themselves and their children. Most of these products (buckyballs especially) are NOT sold to children, for children, and have extensive warning labels. Buckyballs have FIVE warnings on the package. I believe these warnings could be more explicit about the consequences but otherwise are all that SHOULD be needed. Balloons only have 1 warning and are a known choking hazard for small kids. Yet I see no petition to ban balloons? "The Journal of the American Medical Association reported in its Dec. 13, 1995, issue that of the 373 children who died between 1972 and 1992 after choking on children's products." I can't find any deaths related to buckyballs or similar products which ARE NOT CHILDREN'S TOYS. Yet balloons DO cause deaths, well documented, and are specifically advertised to kids! Lets get real and be responsible for ourselves. Require warnings, don't ban. I think twain said it best. "Censorship is telling a man he can't have a steak just because a baby can't chew it." Well the babies are the irresponsible adults and they don't want to chew.

Bert Tredway	Mukilteo, WA	2012-10-10	*Note - most "all-CAPS" words in this document are intended to be stressed as in italics, but I cannot italicize on this forum.  For starters, the FIRST and ONLY time I've even heard of such a ridiculous petition needing to be signed in defense of selling "harmless" toy magnetic balls to responsible adults (as if that's even necessary to limit sales as such) is when I go to a website to purchase some myself. I've not only had many good/positive experiences with these toys, but I feel as though there are far too many implications involved in such legislative/administrative action. I'll attempt to address a few of the bigger issues here, briefly: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. As stated before, I find out when I go to a seller's site! If this were SUCH a big deal, why isn't it a widespread epidemic worthy of at least a few seconds on major news channels? This smells of some personal agenda to shut down a business or two, or an entire industry, some ALTERNATE agenda, or possibly - 2. We CAN not, and further, SHOULD NOT, ATTEMPT to "nerf the world". Not only does this unfairly punish those who are intelligent enough to play with a "should-be" 8+ (ish) year-old toy, but it creates/exacerbates the very issue(s) you're trying to prevent. If we do not interact with and come to terms with natural phenomena in our natural and man-made surroundings, how are we to stay safe? In ORDER to be safe, we must know how to handle such objects - if anything, it should START with such simple items so that we are better prepared to handle the potentially more dangerous objects/substances in our day-to-day surroundings. This would make little sense even if the safety record weren't so stellar, however I wonder - 3. At what point do we hold the PARENT(S) responsible to educate their children? Or, for people to educate THEMSELVES (which, per #2 above, would be hindered by such a piece of legislation or political action of this sort)? How much longer do the masses of people have to suffer the ignorance or even outright stupidity of our fellow citizens? 4. Are we REALLY running out of things to pick on that are genuinely unsafe, or at least quite questionable and not proven? For example, shall we address all the (largely unnecessary) added/unremoved chemicals in our food supply? Chemo therapy drugs? The big point here is that not ONLY are there much bigger issues to be tackled in this world, but also that in these cases there is a much larger risk at stake - to a MUCH larger group of people, MOST of whom are either unaware of the potential TRUE dangers of these substances in society or even aware that they are at risk to begin with. Mass exposure of such substances to an ignorant (of dangers or existence of such items) or unwitting large public is not only irresponsible, but would seem a much larger priority to be addressed. This is intimately tied to - 5. NO ONE can truly know what risk(s) they are taking until they've taken them. We can only educate ourselves (see #2) and act in such capacity that we MINIMIZE our known and as many unknown risks to both ourselves and others/the environment around us. In ANY case, this is for the individual - NOT "big brother" - to decide. Again YES, the best interests of both our children and other susceptible individuals must always be taken into consideration. However this is the whole point of gaining an education and learning to how to interpret and assess dangers as you encounter them. No one can be in the same spot we are to look over our shoulder each step of the way (and you wouldn't WANT that anyhow), so we must be equipped to choose wisely for ourselves. Instead of involving others to look out FOR us and wasting loads of taxpayer money and priceless resources of time, etc in the process, we ought to re-think all the education cuts we have made. A REAL education, though... one that would teach the average citizen (uh-ohhhh, cover your ears...!) HOW to think instead of WHAT to think. If you are honestly attempting to blame the average citizen for being too "ill-equipped" (I'll be nice) to think for themselves, then it is neither them nor the other citizens who should be blamed. This type of legislation WOULD BE, essentially, that sort of blame. Are you saying we are ill-equipped to do so? Odd - why have you allowed that to happen, all the while doing nothing to reverse the trend? Or, wait - perhaps you DO feel we are properly prepared to tread this dangerous world alone... are we not to be trusted in our decisions, then? I suppose I'll leave it at this. A veritable tome, if you will. If I've upset someone, then GREAT! This is certainly an issue (as you can see, multi-faceted and variable) to be upset about! I'll leave on one last note, as this "philosophical outburst" had started out with... We should all be questioning more of what goes on around us. Yes, these things must be addressed (and, hopefully, shut down) as they arise, but where all the all-too-important fundamental questions of "why is this even an issue to be dealt with at this time and in this manner to BEGIN with"? How did we get here? How and where do we go from here? What has (even potentially) been damaged as a result? And, possibly MOST importantly, how do we prevent the (proposed/perceived) necessity of ever having to decide upon something as trivial as this (as a matter of POLICY, specifically) in the first place? Is society failing us? Are we failing society? Our neighbors? Our children?

Andrew Nutter-Upham	Somerville, MA	2012-10-11	I love magnets. I use them for fun and as part of design projects. Adults should know better, and children should be monitored. A little common sense is required here, not a ban.

Edward Gough	Manassas, VA	2012-10-14	Because the CPSC usually targets products which are dangerous when used as intended. In the case of these magnets, that is not the case. If they feel the need to remove these from the market, then they should remove many more dangerous products: cars, guns, swimming pools, trampolines, bicycles, etc. and on and on.

Steve Glasgow	Leavenworth, KS	2012-10-15	The government should be in the business of national security. Do these little magnetic balls pose a threat to our national borders? This is ridiculous. Why do we always punish everyone because a few adults are not responsible enough to protect their kids. First we were worried about little chocolate eggs from Germany with cool little toys inside and now this. What a waste of tax dollars.
Myra Schjelderup	SLC, UT	2012-10-15	I love to play with magnets! Have ever since I was a kid. A little kid. Who didn't swallow magnets. Just because some people are stupid doesn't mean we have to make life less fun or easy for everyone else. Enough of that, please.

Austin Feller	North Wales, PA	2012-10-16	It's freedom. Fifty years ago, a person could build a house on his own property without permission practically anywhere. Today, s/he can't. A hundred years ago, someone could train himself to become a lawyer or most other professions. People today talk about freedom as though it's a birthright of modernity. It's not. There are more rules and regulations that affect the day to day activities of citizens of the United States today than there were for slaves in ancient Rome. People imagine themselves more free today than people in the past were because they think of the punishments of the past. Three hundred years of activism has finally almost eliminated the use of torture as a technique for enforcing the law, at least in the West. And that's good. But the last three hundred years has not made people more free. There's not a person in America today who knows whether s/he is in full compliance with the national law because there's not a person who's read the whole law code. It's too long, and it changes and grows faster than people can read. I don't own any of the banned magnets, and I don't intend to buy them. My roommate in college had them. They were fun. We amused each other with them. There's a lot of risk to living. People die and injure themselves from all sorts of things. People get sick from breathing. Banning a seldom injury-causing toy just because it's small enough that it can be swallowed isn't really making the world safer. It's just making the world a little bit less free.

Ryan Lugenbill	Casper, WY	2012-10-17	As a veteran of two deployments, these magnets help me relax. Remembering back to 8th grade geology and 9th grade science it was established that swallowing magnets can be deadly. QUIT REGULATING PRODUCTS THAT ARE NOT A PROBLEM.
Randall Clements	Leavenworth, KS	2012-10-17	This are not, will not nor have ever been marketed for children. It is the parent's responsibility to provide a safe environment for their children not the government's.
Isaiah Nelson	Sheridan, WY	2012-10-17	Because I am opposing Big Government controlling free enterprise. The notion of Big Government or a government that inhibits Liberty also gets in the way of natural law. If you swallow a magnet you get hurt, but its a personal choice and not one that any form of government can rule on. It goes against the constitution and deeply our rights. Zen Magnets and the like are not forcing children to swallow these magnets. It is up the parents and individuals to govern their interaction with the items they buy for their children or themselves. Vote in favor of Liberty. Vote Libertarian. And say HELL NO to Big Government.
Matthew Mullett	Leawood, KS	2012-10-17	Because we deserve the freedom to buy these magnets if we want. Thousands and thousands of products are just as dangerous for kids. Lets ban colorful dish detergent gel packs and bleach as well.
David Gentzel	Wexford, PA	2012-10-17	Model rockets, chemistry sets, magnets, all part of a good engineer's formative years. Outlaw them (or restrict them to such a degree that it's the same thing) and you stunt the intellect of our future inventors and entrepreneurs.
Douglas Cannon	Lindon, UT	2012-10-17	This is important to me, because I disagree with nanny-state laws, and I do not believe that magnet spheres represent any kind of significant threat to society. I have young children, I have magnets. I do not let my children play with knives, strong magnets, or fire.
James brooks	oxnard, CA	2012-10-18	This doesn't seem like a logical thing to ban from the public under the guise of safety. Seems suspicious to me and makes me curious as to what this hidden agenda might be.
Travis Hannah	carpentersville, IL	2012-10-18	Regulation for the sake of regulation should not exist. If there is no need then it should not be done. Guns can be owned by adults with children. The only reason that I see the CPSC doing this is because they think that there is a minority that won't have the numbers to fight against their stupidity.
Joshua Kintz	Collinsville, IL	2012-10-19	I am signing because Zen Magnets, the highest quality 5mm magnet on the market in my humble opinion, channel my growing creativity in a way that pencil and paper and other mediums simply cannot. I am signing as a responsible adult that has equally responsible friends with these magnets and we have never had any issue. We have had only good times. I see this whole case as a knee-jerk reaction against a quiet, self-sustaining company that has never had any reported incidents against it. Zen Magnets are meditative, contemplative, creative, and healing. It would be a crime to stop the sale of such a high-quality product from an exclusive, responsible company.

Knives, cleaning products and simple matches can cause as severe damage if not more if one puts their mind to it. It is up to the user to neogiate the dangers and be self-aware to them. It is not up to government to assume a nanny-state role and make the decision for us.

Michael Ardrey	Aspendale, Australia	2012-10-23	This is important to me, because if I want to use magnets then I should have a right to use magnets. I know the dangers and so do the majority of people using them. To punish the entire magnet-utilising population based on a minority of individuals does not promote equal human rights.
Ryan Di Giorgio	Byron, CA	2012-10-23	Although magnets, like any other item, can cause potential harm to the user if used improperly, the manufacturer should not be punished for the consumer's negligence. The dangers of the item are clearly stated. It is a parent's responsibility to make sure that children, and adults alike, who cannot or refuse to use the items properly, to be unable to gain access to the item. Magnets are an artistic item, labeled just as paint. Do not consume, etc. If the consumer decided to drink the paint after the warning has been placed in a blatantly obvious manner, is the paint manufacturer now at fault? What about cigarette companies who market their product to teenagers, and whose product causes cancer? Are they not held accountable for their actions? Cigarettes, in no way provide any form of productive stimulation. Magnets allow a person to think creatively and artistically. To work their hands and gain dexterity, and to help arthritic hands. I am against CPSC and believe that forcing all responsibility onto the manufacturer would leave us to an even worse future than we are headed towards currently. If the consumer bears no responsibility for their actions, more deaths will occur because consumers will not care about their actions. This is not a matter of prohibiting manufacturers, it is a matter of educating the public. Clearly stated labels address this, and anyone interested in the product should be assumed to have understood the potential outcomes of product use as well as bearing responsibility for improper use of the item.
Michael Cardozo	Murray, UT	2012-10-23	This product is fun and enlightening. It also provides an educational value with the limitless amount of geometrical possibilities that can be produced. If anyone (age regardless) ingests them and is harmed, that is one less individual to taint the gene pool. America has this bad habit of protecting unintelligent people. Then they let them multiply.
Michael Cuffe	San Mateo, CA	2012-10-24	The CPSC doesn't ban swimming pools, or household chemicals (all intended for adult use as well), so why magnets. I understand the damage that it may do to a child, but that danger is no less than a match. Also, in a time when the country is trying to recover economically, shutting down a small business in the name of "safety" is ridiculous. The government is not our parent, and we should be able to buy magnets if we choose.

Charles Thomas	Rising Sun, MD	2012-10-24	I am a father of a 2 yr old little girl and owner of a set of Neoballs. I read the warning that came with the product and as a responsible adult and parent kept them away from my little girl. Aside from the educational aspect of the product they are a fun stress relief device and the ban is ridiculous. for a federally funded organization to target a US based small business in the hard economical times we live in who has no reports against them I feel is an injustice and I feel that the spending of my tax dollars to pursue such a ban against a product is outrageous. I am certain that the money being spent on this could be better used somewhere else. It is in my opinion, harsh as it may be, the fault of the parents of the children that have been injured. I refuse to candy coat this issue let us not continue down this road where we cover the negligence of a few with a government ban. Why should I lose the opportunity to utilize this product after being a responsible adult and reading the warning and keeping them away and out of reach from my child. This is an issue of parenting and the failure of certain parent to read labels and understand the danger. It is unfortunate that this type of accident has occurred, but there hundreds if not thousands of useless injuries and accidents across this country probably daily from other product without such outrageous actions such as a government ban on them. I will end with this one personal note. I can go out to any store right now and buy a BB gun and even more popular and probably easier to find Air soft gun (have seen these in "Toy Stores") that have been throughout there history been marketed as a toy, some with age restrictions, and causing injury. This is a personal as I know 2 people who have been injured by such product without any such actions by the CPSC. One child who at the approximate age of 7 lost an eye when a neighborhood kid was playing with such a product and One young Adult who again lost an eye when her boyfriend playing with his new toy accidentally shot her. I am sure this is not the only incident of this yet no such action by the CPSC.

Don't blame the accidents on the magnet, when it is clear that if there are toddlers in the general area put them away! Out of reach. It's incredibly easy to perform this simple task. If they're too blind to do this, they should be removed from their position as parent. A sufficient punishment for not meeting their needs as an owner of a child.

Amy Potter	Lawton, OK	2012-10-29	The magnets are of little to no danger. The only danger comes from being swallowed. You can't accidentally swallow these. They are no different than a small pill or poison pellets that could draw a child's interest in swallowing. Both are sold in retail stores. It does not require Age Verification to buy Antihistamine or some Poisons. These Magnets should be allowed sale in hardware stores as magnetic ball bearings, which do serve a mechanical purpose. If regulated it should be distributed in a way such as spray paint. Show ID at purchase to verify you are over 18yrs old. Some cleaners carry a greater risk. While scrubbing or spraying it is easily possible to splash some in your eyes causing burning and/or lasting redness of the eye. Some say potential blindness. Yet there is no way to "accidentally" ingest these magnetic balls.

Let public opinion vote here, if the outcry is great enough that this product is not wanted in society then people would not buy it and the company ceases to exist. I don't see a huge outcry against other products that are sold on a day to day basis that are equally or more dangerous, more households have bleach lying around and if that is swallowed its more likely to kill someone than this toy. The federal government still prints pennies, nickels, dimes and quarters, kids swallow those more commonly than this resulting in far more hospitalizations, but no one is going to argue with that, no is anyone after the chocolate coin industry which could give children the idea that all money is edible (hyperbole I know, but this is how stupid those arguing against this product sound)

Baxter Elwood	Prescott, AZ	2012-11-01	The government has no right to dictate how we live our lives. It's just like Ben Franklin said, "They who can give up essential liberty to obtain a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety." While magnetic spheres may not have been the essential liberty he was referring to, the claim still stands. The government can't force people to be safe, it's completely hypocritical. How are we supposed to be free in the "Land of the Free" if we are being denied the freedom to be (as the government sees it) unsafe. Stop forcing me and the rest of this nation to live "safely" by restricting choice, stop forcing magnet companies under by banning their products (I thought jobs were important to this government), and let us buy magnetic spheres again.

Rest assured, there are households like the aforementioned across America. Households where the inhabitants know full well that a magnetic sphere is not food, and know better than to ingest it. Jonathan Pugh	South Park, PA	2012-11-03	Because the Constitution starts off with "We the People", not "We Your Children".
Mia Ledwich	Daytona Beach, FL	2012-11-03	Zen magnets are a great tool for learning. Some parents need to pay more attention to thier children when they play with toys, I love these magnets. They have helped me with homework multiple times.
Abul Siddiqui	Austin, TX	2012-11-03	This is a very stupid case. Lousy parents want government to nanny their lousy kids. As an adult, I want to able to purchase these whenever I want.
Jeanne Schlegel	Rockford, IL	2012-11-03	These are adult toys, not for kids. You wouldn't leave your booze or cigarettes around for kids to eat. Put your magnets with them!
Dmitriy Chernookiy	Carrboro, NC	2012-11-03	A blanket ban is outrageously excessive and irrational. Although I don't know all the details, from what I read, I believe the CPSC is acting unreasonably and should not have this much power to begin with. I am not opposed to some regulation that's designed to keep these out of the hands of children, such as marketing, safety labels and informing parents. A complete ban, however, is a misguided and lazy approach. Despite not even owning any of these magnets, I am signing this petition because the government is clearly overstepping their proper authority and I can't allow this to happen quietly.
scott hawks	Manassas, VA	2012-11-03	Restricting sales from minors, fine. I don't need the government to protect me or my family from a toy.
kalon grimshaw	blackburn, United Kingdom	2012-11-03	Well i've never actually used them (yet) so i want a lasting memory to remind me when i'm older.
CESETTI Sandro	France	2012-11-03	IT'S A PASSION AND I DON'T WANT TO LOOSE SUCH A GREAT PRODUCT !!!
Mark Jones	Huntsville, AL	2012-11-03	Magnets bring curiosity, curiosity brings solutions. Ever wonder why 'merica is dumber today than yesterday?
Jacob Dansie	Logan, UT	2012-11-03	Education, not legislation, is the key to a better tomorrow. I don't like the idea of banning a product simply because it can be dangerous if misused.
Chris Tucker	Lancaster, MA	2012-11-03	This is someones business that is being shut down and their products banned because some kids misuse the product. If magnetic toys are banned because of misuse and something like spray paint or pesticide which is much more dangerous is not, then where is the equality and free enterprise? I feel that the banishment of these products that are not inherently dangerous is horribly wrong. We need to educate people of the possible risks of magnets instead of banning the products.
Tiffany Park	Brea, CA	2012-11-04	Signing this petition is important to me because I have a very close friend that is a talented magnet artist. If magnet spheres are prohibited, his talent will go to waste. Parents with children should know better than to allow their children to play with magnets without supervision. Companies like ZenMagnets should not be prohibited from manufacturing and selling their products.

austin lew	Castro Valley, CA	2012-11-04	i love magnets and cannot put them down it would be a crying shame if irresponsible parents made it so the rest of the United States could not use them
austin lew	Castro Valley, CA	2012-11-04	this is just crazy ... 100 people a year die from swallowing pens ... why doesnt the government ban pens???
Patrick Price	Middletown, NJ	2012-11-04	There is no reason to ban these. The fact that it's even being considered is disgusting to me.
Ned Furlan	Chicago, IL	2012-11-04	Responsibility of reading of product warnings
Greg G	Cedar Rapids, IA	2012-11-04	If you attack a product based on the speculation that it can be consumed and cause health problems, then you'll have to stick a laundry list of products on the chopping block next. How many things in the garage, under the sink, in the bathroom, etc. are harmful if swallowed? How about going after all of them instead of independent companies first?
David Risley	Wheat Ridge, CO	2012-11-04	I had a pet rattlesnake growing up, really. Maybe its best if we all enter are padded cells now... watch your step!
Carly Risley	Wheat Ridge, CO	2012-11-04	Ridiculous. Adults should know better than to swallow magnets and the ones who do ... well, we need to thin out the herd anyway. Zen Magnets are clearly not intended for children and it's the parents responsibility, not the governments to ensure their child doesn't play with magnets. Or each trans fats. Or play in the street. Or do anything remotely fun.
David Breitigam	Ridgecrest, CA	2012-11-04	Bicycles injure and kill far more. If they were just now becoming popular, then they would also be under a ban attempt. We should not be passing laws to protect people from their own ignorance and carelessness.
Amanda Dawson	Austin, TX	2012-11-04	ZenMagnets has no history of injuries or deaths. Trying to ban their product is absurd.
cole hunter	helena, MT	2012-11-04	i like the product and it is a very fun toy and learning tool.
Victor Green	Wilmington, DE	2012-11-04	I'm signing because there is no inherit danger from this product. It's only dangerous if misused. I'm very tired of our "nanny state" "protecting us from ourselves". If parents are stupid enough to let their children play with these adult toys then they should answer for their mistakes. Why not hold parents accountable for the injuries they let happen?
Alex Novosad	Franklin, TN	2012-11-05	It's important because we're banning one of the safest household items, period. That's beyond ridiculous. insane. and makes people lose faith in government organization's ability to think straight. We're a nation of reason, not insanity.
Michael Yates	Calhoun, GA	2012-11-05	I think the the Feds are starting to regulate things they have no business regulating. I have used magnet toys for the past few years for fun and relaxation and now I find that the government has determined they are bad for our welfare. US SPSC stop your over regulating - surely you have more important things to do! Keep it up and we citizens may have to ban the US CPSC - no kidding!

C K	Austin, TX	2012-11-05	As a proud and exuberant former owner of a set of nanodots, I am outraged at the CPSC's attempt to ban our magnets. I tried to purchase new ones recently and discovered the state of the magnet world when Zen Magnets made it clear on their website the condition of this product. For the CPSC to do something as wrong as this for the first time in 11 years (as stated by Buckyballs), represents a clear and unprecedented attack on the civil liberty of property guaranteed to us in the 1st amendment of the Constitution. It is also wrong in the aspect that the CPSC is purposefully making it harder on companies that depend on the sale of these products to maintain business. As everyone knows, Nanodots makes it very clear on their website and on their product cases that their product is not intended for people ages 13 and under. Shame on those people for even owning magnets and allowing them to be within reach of small children! Through some self-guided research, I found that the head of the CPSC, Inez Moore Tenenbaum, was appointed to her post by his regence the high lord messiah Barack Hussein Obama. It is concerning that his desire to regulate us is successfully taking its toll on the American people and economy. We need hope, change, and dependable leadership. Free our markets!
C K	Austin, TX	2012-11-05	As a customer of Nanodots, I know from experince that the company places an overload of warning labels on its products and website regarding how not to use their magnets. It is an outrage that the CPSC and the uninformed hordes of "pediatric gastroenterologists" would support the ban of our magnets. It is the fault of poor parenting that those unfortunate children fell victim to their injuries. If the parents had not owned magnets or atleast kept them away from their kids, this would never have happened. The product is terrific for geometric instruction and is an amazing boredom crippler when you're sitting for hours on end after the completion of a state endorsed test like the TAKS, and the school won't let you go home. I used to use the magnets to stick notes and reminders to my office wall and to make christmas tree ornaments. I am hopeful that you will voice your approval for this spectacular product and your disgust towards the CPSC and its regulation-obsessed officials.
Kevin Norris	Boiling Springs, SC	2012-11-05	These are ADULT toys. There are plenty of other magnets sold for other purposes that pose the same danger to children, but I do not see anyone attempting to ban them..
Edouard Landau	Santa Cruz, CA	2012-11-05	Common sense and right to buy what I want!

Jordan Bell	mesa, AZ	2012-11-05	i have ADHD and need these to pass my school classes
Kathy Lupi	Kingsport, TN	2012-11-05	Government should not punish the masses due to the actions of a few. This product is clearly labeled for with an age limit appropriate for safety. If parents do not supervise their children or belongings, that is not the fault of this company.
Joseph Watkins	Crafton, PA	2012-11-05	These are not for children. Much like kitchen knives and drain cleaner. They are clearly marked. Parents need to take responsibility for their own children.
sean moynahan	Abbotsford, Canada	2012-11-05	cause there awesome
Michael DiGioia	Patchogue, NY	2012-11-05	These are toys geared for adults. It is the responsibility of the owner to handle them with care. It even gives large warning on the side of the boxes, that you should not swallow them.
Jacob Nabors	Navarre, FL	2012-11-05	Beuase it is unfair that when a company has ZERO!!! incidents that ths CSPC is attacking A company that doesn't reach out to the kids and doesn't call it's self a toy. And has many warning labels On the Box and in the instructions!!!

Gabe O	Centerville, UT	2012-11-07	They are so cool! DONT EAT!!!
Shelby Tellez	Ogden, UT	2012-11-07	I love these magnets! I bought some online a week ago and I am addicted to them. They help releive stress and well, they're just fun! Why would anyone want to ban fun?! It's ridiculous! If small children are swallowing them, then the parents shouldn't let them play with them! Why would you hand a toddler supermagnet spheres?! It's idiotic... and it isn't the magnets' fault either. If you let your kid play with window cleaner and they drink it and die, does that mean we should ban all cleaning chemicals? No!!! Please don't ban fun. It's not right.
Keegan Jones	Spokane, WA	2012-11-07	Why the bloody hell does the government have the right to regulate this? They themselves do not cause direct harm. I could understand regulations even, but an absolute ban makes no logical sense. ESPECIALLY in the case of Zen Magnets who have zero recorded incidents and have never been sold in stores. This is a failing in the part of parents and people, not the manufacturers or merchants.
Austin Davis	Meridian, ID	2012-11-07	they are fun and irresponsible parents should not get what they want. FOR AGES 16 AND UP
Christopher Charpentier	Doral, United States	2012-11-07	Manet Spheres are great, not considered a toy.. CPSC should considered this threat
Tiffany Jones	Huntington, IN	2012-11-08	This is ridiculous, the few injuries resulting from magnets has been blatant misuse. Adults aren't allowed to have toys now because of a few of them make for irresponsible parents? Kids get hurt with plenty of other things, should we just stop producing all small objects? Perhaps we could cover everything in a protective layer of bubble wrap... oh wait, they'd probably suffocate. How do we stop all kids everywhere from getting hurt ever?
hayden Hood	Pakenham, Australia	2012-11-08	These magnets are an amazing product which can unleash creativity and release stress. A government which will ban a product after only several accidental (and most likely negligent) deaths but will allow almost anyone to hoard guns and buy bullets by the dozen from the local store is not one which deserves to be in power.
Catherine David	Australia	2012-11-08	bound to affect australian market
Matthew Wirth	Brooklyn Park, MN	2012-11-08	This is extreme over regulation- a pencil, a knife, a glass. These things we can buy with no regulation despite the obvious dangers. It is my duty as my own human to protect myself- we can't protect everyone from every risk there is in the world, and magnetic spheres are less dangerous than any of these (let alone driving to and from work).
Jeremy Amaismeier	State College, PA	2012-11-08	This is an over-reaction that is out of proportion to the number of incidents that have resulted in injury.
John Macker	Macon, GA	2012-11-08	The government should not be prohibiting business from creating a product designed to teach science. This is completely absurd. Not only are the next to no complaints, but there are far more dangerous things being marketed as toys to children. Helping inspire children to take an interest in science far outweighs any risk (real or perceived as I believe it is) associated with these products. This entire ordeal is completely ludicrous.

Jeff Robinson	Taylorville, UT	2012-11-08	Many fun things made for adults can be harmful to children. Russ Garlow	Valdosta, GA	2012-11-08	Magnetic construction sets are a source of inspiration and creativity. While some people might not appreciate their importance, others do. Lorece Aitken	Madison, WI	2012-11-08	SERIOUSLY, we are banning small magnets? Are beads next? or coinage? ANYTHING smaller than a toddler's throat? Can't we just ban stupid parents?
Tod Mahony	Johnston, RI	2012-11-08	There are plenty of tempting toys, objects, and materials which are dangerous or fatal if ingested by children or other beloved animals. I do not believe that prohibition is the proper response to the problem.
Gavin Madkins	Fridley, MN	2012-11-08	This is important to me because I believe that magnet spheres are a good medium for art and banning them is wrong.
Robert LEigh	San Diego, CA	2012-11-08	The CPSC is out of line. We should not be wasting government resources regulating such a novelty item due to the extraordinarily low rate of medical incidents.

Chris Marcellus	Phelan, CA	2012-11-09	Because, I'm tired of "a few bad apples ruin the bunch" I hate the fact that small children are mistaking these for food, when it can be avoided. PUT THEM AWAY AND OUT OF REACH. I mean its really not that hard! And there may be a few older individuals who eat these, and really, if there is anyone over ten years old, and they eat small magnets, then need some mental help, because that's really not normal. I want to be able to purchase these magnets and enjoy them instead of a few kids that swallow these, when really its the parents fault for either not 1. putting them away. Or 2. Buying these fro these kids who are obviously unfit to handle these curiously strong magnets.
lois barnett	PORT TOWNSEND, WA	2012-11-09	because we don't need the government to protect us from magnets.

Seth Gibelyou	Provo, UT	2012-11-09	I love playing with these magnets at home and at work. The notion that people feel they have the right to label something as useless and ban it because they had a bad experience for which they were responsible is absolutely ludicrous.
Amanda Leaman	Sanford, MI	2012-11-09	Not only do magnets relieve stress, they also encourage mental stimulation, and help people with trichotillomania not to harm them selves. Christopher Ritter	Lafayette, IN	2012-11-11	I believe these magnets are more than a toy. They have sparked new creative interest into science and art since market introduction. Anything can be dangerous if not used responsibly. Water is known to be fatal if inhaled, and there are multiple reports of those occurrences every year--especially in children--but that doesn't mean we should ban it completely. These attacks on this product are unjust and unnecessary.

James Mosher	Riverton, UT	2012-11-12	Banning these is absurd. The number of things dangerous to children in this world is too high to count. Banning a popular desk toy marketed to adults seems as misguided as it is ineffective. I urge you to reconsider.
Bill Lui	OROVILLE, CA	2012-11-13	No law can protect people from themselves, big brother and the police state are contrary to a democracy. David Jones	San Diego, CA	2012-11-24	Because I believe this is a government FAIL!
Raghu Kasetty	Gladstone, MI	2012-11-24	I agree with strong warnings to keep magnets away from the kids. I am against banning the small magnet sales or use by anybody.
Steffan Whitt	Gray Court, SC	2012-11-25	It is quite simple people if the only problem is that kids are eating these magnetic balls well there is an easy fix to that simply keep it out of the way of childrens reach how hard is that there is no need to completely ban these just amazing toys that is way too far that is taking this to an over exaggerated level. to see that only a few mishaps have happened in the past year just proves that this is not the main issue. Stop focusing on little stuff CPSC focus on something more important!
michael maskalans	rochester, NY	2012-11-29	Banning magnets is unreasonable and overreaching. Many other products are far more dangerous but widely accepted.
Jacob Melino	., VA	2012-12-01	I have a set, and while I understand the danger, banning a product because of the negligence of adults is illogical. Ignorance is the culprit, not the product.
Michael Szeman	Rohnert Park, CA	2012-12-03	These are magnets! I can eat a magnet I buy from the store the same as I could eat these. I think ingestion is just an excuse for the real reason
Kyle Schmitz	Norman, OK	2012-12-03	Another case of a government organization abusing the authority entrusted to them by citizens. The effort and money to enact this ban would have been better served by an educational campaign on the hazards of these products so citizens may make our own purchasing decisions.
Joseph Castille	Baton Rouge, LA	2012-12-03	Part of being a parent is keeping your kids away from harmful things. Guns don't have warning labels on them once they're taken out of a package, nor do pills. Magnets like this encourage people to experiment and learn. Is it any wonder people aren't interested in math and science, anymore? We're preventing them from coming into contact with anything that could potentially be dangerous on the grounds that someone might be stupid enough to let their toddler play with it. My kitchen knives didn't come with a warning, but I know they aren't for children.
andrew macomber	dale city, VA	2012-12-05	there is a border line for regulation and over regulation. and this is just a waste of money to try to ban this. buckyballs already went out of buisnis (wile i don't care for them anymore) and now zen magnets are at risk. i'm glad i found this.
Christian Stafford	Pembroke, MA	2012-12-06	These magnets are really fun to play with and it is a shame that the Government is trying to get rid of them.
Blake Courter	Concord, MA	2012-12-06	I love playing with my magnets, and think that warning labels would be an adequate solution to the problem

Cory Gargas	rootstown, OH	2012-12-07	I feel that just banning them is a bit on the harsh side, why not increase regulations first and if that doesn't work, then ban them?
Joel Hunt	Oceanside, CA	2012-12-08	I'm tired of the tools or objects being blamed for harmful acts when the responsibility lies with those using them or are responsible for overseeing their proper use.
Brent Fallon	Jamesville, NY	2012-12-08	The were advertised to not be for people under a certain age. Its the parents' faults for buying the magnet toys for their kids who were clearly too young for it. Stop targeting executive Desk-toys and concentrate on something that makes sense to ban. Like McDonalds.
Karra Adler	Staunton, IL	2012-12-08	Of all the issues facing our country THIS is something that needs to tie up precious time and effort? I know many couples who have had Buckyballs for decades in their homes, but have been responsible enough to keep them out of their children's hands. Consequently articles I've read on this issue detail how some of these children's parents haven't been as diligent. These are including one parent in a CNN article that admitted she left them on an end table while her child played in the room unsupervised. The majority of us responsible adult should not be treated as though we're unable to become educated any perceived dangers. If this goes through then what next? My headphones have dangling cords and are routinely left out on my desk when my friends children visit. Does that mean they should be banned because there's the possibility they could wrap their necks with the cord and choke themselves?
Bradley Hicks	Fort Worth, TX	2012-12-08	This is stupid beyond my words to express. You thugs at the CPSC have no legal authority to ban anything not proven to be seriously dangerous. I will continue buying them all the more as you seek to ban them. I deny you your authority.
Alexander A Petersen	Sandefjord, Norway	2012-12-08	The CPSC should re-think their priorities. I'm not an american, but I hope a small vote from overseas makes a difference. Instead of banning magnets, they should start thinking about guns, alcohol, glass, knives, buckets, trampolines, cars, ladders, axes, staircases, medicine, basic tools, ETC!
steven vitale	Lombard, IL	2012-12-08	i love these magnets and beleive that banning them would cause many more problems then it is worth.
angel acevedo	San Diego, CA	2012-12-08	Why would the goverment choose to ban these magnets?????????
Sean Trujillo	Albuquerque, NM	2012-12-09	People are stupid. We shouldnt be punished just because some dumb parents don't know how to keep things away from their kids.
JACK BYARS	IRMO, SC	2012-12-11	STRESS RELIEF
Denise Mobley	Tulsa, OK	2012-12-12	Absolutely unfair to responsible people. Where's the outdry to ban alsohol? More people die from drunk driving than magnet ingestion. Come on, get sane!
Kyle O'Brien	Hereford, AZ	2012-12-17	These magnets are very enjoyable, and I would like to buy many someday, but if they are banned I wouldn't be able to. Also, they are not nearly as dangerous as guns. People just need to be more responsible about who uses them.
jakob voogd	scotland, Canada	2012-12-17	because buckyballs is the best toy i have played with
Debra Williamson	Fairbanks, AK	2012-12-19	These are fun toys for adults. Banning them because they could be dangerous to children is nonsensical; there are plenty of items that children cannot play with that are not banned. Balloons do indeed cause so many more deaths every year!

Jason Ballew	Austin, TX	2012-12-20	I think that the Federal Government needs to stop trying to regulate intelligence. Parents are meant to parent, not companies and not the Federal Government. You do realize, by the way, that your hamhanded actions are actually causing MORE people to buy Buckyballs and Zen Magnets?
Matthew Rodenberg	Halstead, KS	2012-12-22	These things are awesome and there are much more dangerous products out there. It's not the magnet's fault people are swallowing these things, it's the people who give them to little kids and the dumb older people that are swallowing them too.
Kismet Salem	Venice, CA	2012-12-25	It is overall important to put responsibility back into the peoples hand and not in government or companies. These lawsuits and incredulous blaming of outside things need to stop in order to bring self government to the people and therefore freedom.
Randy Gifford	Vancouver, WA	2012-12-26	Magnets are educational. We can not and should not try to ban everything hazardous. Part of a childs learning process is learning to safely navigate hazards.
Bernardo Cancelinha	V. N. de Gaia, Portugal	2012-12-30	I've been a Buckyballs fan since too long and i thing it's not their problem that some kids swallowed the magnet.
Robert Irving	Rolla, MO	2012-12-31	Making magnets illegal is not the solution to the problem, perhaps you should considering making stupid parents illegal instead.
Brian Kirk	Columbus, OH	2013-01-05	These are great for scientific experiments and atomic/molecular interaction demonstrations.
phillip pugh	bloomington, IN	2013-01-12	this is important to me because descions like these effect everyone including myself why should i stand by and allow a law that would prohibit people from buying magnets when really parents need to be more aware of what they have around there toddlers and maybe teaching kids this in gradeschool would be a good idea a reform of the dusty old school inc
Kyle Thompson	New York, NY	2013-01-13	Because this crack-down is absurd. These products ship with appropriate warning labels, and have fair value to exist on the open market.
logan carter	orlando, FL	2013-01-13	i love bucky balls neocubes and zen magnets because its very awesome time killer and me and my kids love em there not stupid enough to swallow them each is 13 years old i hope they don't ban them because i will run for govenor just to bring them back
Ivan riveralvanRivera	aurora, IL	2013-01-19	Magnets can be very awesome and fun to play with but not to eat
Herp Derp	vaughn, Canada	2013-01-30	I use these magnets as a delicious snack. I eat them all the time. They are just so delicious.
Giovanni Pedler	London, Canada	2013-02-02	the us cpsc should be going after more dangerous products. plus it's common sense not to eat magnets and the packagin is labeled all over with warning signs
gunter zielke	Sunland, CA	2013-02-12	The nanny state is the precursor to a tyranny.
Helen Granger-Quinn	Leicester, United Kingdom	2013-02-16	People need to learn to take responsibility for themselves and their dependents without the constant intervention we've come to expect in this nanny state.
reid buchanan	Marietta, GA	2013-02-18	Yes there are no more U.S. buckyballs. But China does and they're cheaper. it's actually a lot better to buy from China. So great job U.S. government.you did it again:(stupid

dominik slevatz	Kalamazoo Township, MI	2013-03-07	magnets are not the problem its the irresponsible parents
Troy Moppin	Leavenworth, KS	2013-03-08	I feel that there are many more important things that the government could do with the time. energy and money. And I also feel that there is a certain amount of personal responsibility that should be practiced. And we do not need the government holding our hands on every thing in our lives
Jacob McLean	Cortland, IL	2013-03-18	Not only are the magnets entertaining but they are also stimulating to the mind. I am 21 years of age an unable to purchase a product intended for people 14 and up. Despite warning labels, child proof containers, and other measures taken to prevent small children from ingesting the magnets they are still banned in the U.S. Living with two small children I understand how easy it is to keep items not intended for them out of reach or packed safely away. All I want is the ability to purchase a product intended for my age group as a simple way to have fun, stimulate my mind, and relieve stress. But unfortunately, until others can learn to be more responsible and learn to listen to warning labels I am unable to do so. Countless other products, many even more dangerous, have yet to be banned because of simple warning labels as the only precaution. The product itself is not to be blamed. The blame should be put on the owners because if they are too irresponsible to follow directions and warning printed in bold all across the packaging then they should not purchase the product at all. I for one am responsible and capable of taking measure to ensure the safety of others. I am also infuriated because of the simple fact that I am unable to do so.
Mark Luterra	Corvallis, OR	2013-03-19	Fed up with government rulemaking.
Robert Muckleroy	Elyria, OH	2013-03-19	This things are fun and its just bad parenting that are ruining stuff for adults to play with.
Lloyd Standish	Cornville, AZ	2013-03-30	Banning magnets is an absurd and intolerable violation of consumer rights. Should cutlery also be banned?
Nate Laux	Cincinnati, OH	2013-04-02	Maybe the enforcement of better clarification of product dangers is something to be considered but to ban a toy/science kit that allows one to explore there own creativity is absurd. Our country is advancing rapidly due to more practical design, innovative technology and complex engineering. As a person who values education and a passion for innovative design, I will say first hand that I back the use of this product as a creative release for stress that accompanies the hard work I put in each day.
Jason Gorczewski	Rapid City, SD	2013-04-18	I'm sick of our government infringing upon our personal rights and decisions - STAY OUT OF OUR LIVES I love these magnets, and my future generations should have the same opportunity to be enthralled by them

Monique Merritt	Davis, CA	2013-04-23	I don't think nanodots should be banned from the US, I think parents who let their kids eat magnets should be banned from the US
Dan Niedere	Hastings, MN	2013-04-23	I am strongly opposed to government overreach. This is a free nation. We do not need to protect people from themselves.

Jordan Masters	Albany, NY	2013-05-04	I wanted to purchase a set, and realized that they were all banned. I see no reason why they should possibly be banned. Out of all of the sets that were sold, only a handful of injuries actually occurred, and a company with no prior injuries was effected.
Kerwin Gonzalez	Mckinney, TX	2013-05-11	Very Educational and very good stress relief. 10000 more dangerous things out there than this story roberts	cheyenne, WY	2013-05-16	Magnets are not dangers to our children
John Sherrill	Peru, IN	2013-05-18	This is absurd. America is a free country. What is next? Banning all sharp objects?
Josh Lowry	Tampa, FL	2013-05-24	Because I don't agree that because parents aren't properly raising their kids and teaching them what to eat and what not to eat, that everyone that is intelligent enough to know not to eat magnets has to lose their rights to own or buy something
Günter Roth	Germany	2013-05-25	I myself use these magnets (as cubes) for science and always liked the art which was made with the magnetic balls. It sounds so stupid. A country, believing to be one of the greatest and oldest democracies, it seems to be easier to buy guns and bullets than magnets.... very stupid somehow, maybe they should also ban Brezels as the great Bush nearly died from one
Mohammad Bajelori	El Cajon, CA	2013-06-01	I love these toys and don't think they should be banned, Many things can harm kids around the house, like kitchen knives, stoves, PLASTIC BAGS, many other small toys, like legos, marbles...etc. These magnet companies have warned people MANY MANY places on the packages, and I think people will be careful. Hide them from children, I hide my magnets so I don't get them close to electronics. Please legalize the selling of magnets once again.
Steven Looper	Chandler, AZ	2013-06-06	One of the adult toys I get to enjoy is being revoked. Because why? Low IQ parents are letting their children play with them. That's the problem of the parents. Then expect warning labels aren't good enough. Their children, they can't read. This is just a great example of today's parents and today's worthless government.
Marie-claire Sartore	France	2013-06-09	Magnets Cube FORERVER !!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!! Educate your children stupid !
Kevin Kane	Grayslake, IL	2013-06-10	I bought a pack of Zen Magnets a few years ago and I was looking to purchase a Mandala set. I had heard that BuckyBalls was having legal troubles but I had no idea it applied to all magnet sellers. This is misguided law will not fix the problem, only stop a semi-related issue. I'm buying a Mandala set soon and I will gladly support this petition.
Christian Oudard	san francisco, CA	2013-06-10	These magnets are wonderful toys to teach people about mathematics and geometry, and banning them is definitely a step backward.
Frederick Trankels	Hanover, MA	2013-06-12	they are one of the only things that bring joy to adults

eric morrison	summersville, WV	2013-06-25	I have had one year of college studying electrical engineering. Nick Champagne	West Chicago, IL	2013-06-25	I feel that magnet spheres should be allowed for those that want to purchase them because they are barely a dent in the causes of child death. Magnet spheres should not be used by children under at least 12 because of the swallowing problem but shouldn't be banned for everyone else
John Mardlin	Victoria, Canada	2013-06-26	Don't remove parental responsibility.

Sean Ausi	Shelby Twp., MI	2013-07-16	THIS IS NOT A TOY MARKETED TO KIDS. YOU CAN NOT BUY IT AT A TOY STORE. YOU CAN ONLY OBTAIN THEM ONLINE, WHERE A CHILD CLEARLY CANT GET THEM BECAUSE YOU NEED A CREDIT CARD. THERE ARE COUNTLESS WARNING LABLES ALREADY PUT OUT BY THESE COMPANIES. THIS IS CLEARLY FUCKING STUPID. FUCK YOU CPSC.ANTI-CONSUMER BULLSHIT.
Dj Migz	Laredo, TX	2013-07-18	The government should not care about magnets if they don't care about guns
Andreas Grehn	SKövde, Sweden	2013-07-23	The magnets are amazing as both a toy and a science experiment. I love them and a permanent ban is ridiculous.
Cody Christianson	Ames, IA	2013-07-26	Its a dumb rule
christian shelton	Birmingham, United Kingdom	2013-07-28	I want to get these soon, why should they be banned for a few incidents .Alcohol and tobacco is what the government should be focusing more on resolving the problems to not this.
Dan Bastin	Oceanside, CA	2013-07-28	We need LESS government interference in our daily live...this is a silly & ridiculous ban on a very creative and entertaining product.
Gage Swenson	Phoenix, AZ	2013-08-04	The government doesn't need to hold everybody's hand.
ben rueter	irmo, SC	2013-08-06	I had a deep bond with buckyballs and want to avenge its death.
Nicholas Capaldi	Glenside, PA	2013-08-09	I own them and would like to continue the fun with these adult toys
Hannah Malchak	Fort Riley, KS	2013-08-11	Banning magnets would hinder educational and artistic development; for individuals and society.
Xander Duran	longmont, CO	2013-08-12	I am signing here because I would like to use these to discuss and models theoretical electromagnetic engines and and machines. Also the capabilities of the magnets are endless when combined with the human mind. As for the safety it is ones job to make sure they and their family are safe if that means not enjoying thees because someone in the household is irresponsible, then so be it leave these magnets to the intuitive thees area little more than just toys.
James Kilpatrick	Gilmer, TX	2013-08-14	I like magnets of all kinds and want my children to learn from them as I have. Also the government is being ridiculous for banning magnets.

sara sista	Chicago, IL	2013-08-16	It seems like an unwarranted ban. There are plenty of things to learn from magnets such as these. and if as a 1st grader I could avoid ingesting iron shavings, and earth magnets I do not see why it is necessary to issue a recall because of those that could not.
Steve Seichepine	Clayton, DE	2013-08-27	Enough is enough. Government intrusion is overreaching its boundaries, and we need to stop it, everywhere and anyhow possible.
Travis Jensen	Lehi, UT	2013-08-27	I don't let toddlers swallow lead bullets, either. This is a witch-hunt by the federal government, caused by an organization that sees all the power other federal departments are taking and wants its own.
Denise Esh	Phoenix, AZ	2013-08-31	The product comes with warnings and they are fun, and educational and allow you to explore your creative/artistic side. They can recall them, but I know that I'll never turn mine in and neither will anyone else I know who owns them, because the ban/recall is simply ridiculous.
aaron oneal	new albany, IN	2013-09-01	If children are eating magnets then in what way is that the fault of the magnet distributor. Obviously the parents are not paying enough attention to the children, and/or the children are not smart enough to not eat MAGNETS... and when has prohibition ever worked I mean really I am 25 years old and smart enough to not eat them. So why are you banning sales to me? They are in no way a health concern to me and I don't have kids so they are not an issue there either.
Dave Emanuelson	Ishpeming, MI	2013-09-03	No interest in the product, but think banning it is beyond ridiculous.
Aisyah Nawawi	Dungun, Malaysia	2013-09-09	It's parent responsibility, not magnet manufacturer's to oversee their children. All that's needed is warning and education, not complete prohibition. Magnets have far more benefits than danger. Bullet and the everyday knife are more dangerous than this. This prohibition is so ridiculous that it even got me thinking CPSC is up to something behind the scenes. Maybe Lego payed them off since magnet can be a threat to their educational toy market share. LOL curious.
Nestor Rojas	Lima, Peru	2013-09-13	Because banning a toy because it might be harmful means pretty much all toys should be banned for being a potential hazard, while guns and other more hazardous things are still sold easily. Also because adult toys are for adults, not for children to begin with.
bret flemmons	Houston, TX	2013-09-13	We absolutely do not need yet more government oversight trying to dictate what we can and cannot have. We want liberty, we want freedom, we want our magnetic spheres!
Robert McCullough	Weat Covina, CA	2013-09-13	The magnet balls are clearly marked for adults only. The injury rate is far less than with many common items.They are an enjoyable toy for many adults. This is an excessive overreach of regulatory power.
Phillip Gindelberger	kettering, OH	2013-09-19	Unjust government regulation
Issac Seo	Scottsdale, AZ	2013-09-26	Zen Magnets have been an inspiration to me in creativity and to become an innovator.These addictive magnet spheres and hard to let go, and I would be very sad to watch them go.

Mathias Welzel	richmond hill, Canada	2013-10-05	Its important to me because i think that banning magnetic spheres is a irrational decision. i mean if a child dies due to these it is horrible but in that case put a age requirement on the box. There is also so many other things that kill children but have never even been close to banned. Save Magnets! -Matt
Matt Robinson	Bryan, TX	2013-10-09	These magnets are very educational in the hands of the average high school student. I mean we aren't banning gasoline which is one of the most dangerous things consumers can get their hands on.
Josh Payton	Westminster, CO	2013-10-09	I love these things as a desk toy, and the grounds for them being banned is ridiculous. by the logic of "warning labels don't work" everything in the world that is not specifically a toy for small children would be banned. as long as these products are marketed to adults only how can they justify this? children have a greater risk of accidentally injesting cleaning supplies than they do buckyballs. and this is speaking as a parent of a one year old
Bryanna Walters	seattle, WA	2013-10-14	Magnets have always been a fascination of mine, the fact that there are these amazing sets of them that you can build anything your mind can picture exist is thrilling. Get rid of them? Why? most sites that offer them recommend the user be about 14 years of age certainly old enough to be left alone with magnets. They are a creative tool important to many.
Rik Pennock	Preston, United Kingdom	2013-10-18	There is no need for this ban
Reid Kersey	Alpharetta, GA	2013-10-22	I need an outlet for my ADD while I am working. Please don't take away my fidget toy!
George Murray	Cohoes, NY	2013-10-27	My son has ADD these magnets help him make amazing things it's an art form, this is his way to take a break when homework is frustrating or if he is just frustrated he takes the a break and Zen/Neoballs are his break.. Please stop attacking magnets, parents are the ones responsible for their children and their toys. common sense here people what more can Zen and Neoballs say.. if a child has an issue with putting things in there mouth then the parent is responsible not Zen or Neoballs...Do not ban this product please it would be an injustice to many kids that have ADD or other life issues.. Thank you. George Murray
Cheryl Schenk	Chicago, IL	2013-11-02	Stop the nonsense lawsuit against Craig Zucker.
Tyler Hays	Sugarland, TX	2013-11-05	This is imporant because many of these toys have never been even marketed at childern but at adults. They are good office toys so to speak and this just looks like a witch hunt and a mass over set of their power. There are a lot more dangours toys that should get more attention. It seems like they are going after magnet toys because they do not think the group has the money to fight them against it.
Jacob Grant	Artois, CA	2013-11-05	I'm against any bureaucratic efforts to regulate art on the basis of "Someone might get hurt." Especially if the guilty party is being arrogant.
Noah Conklin	chicago, IL	2013-11-06	These magnets have entertained me for years
Gregory Drew	Salem, MO	2013-11-06	Warning labels on these spherical magnets were clear, keep away from children. American adults are fully within their rights to own much more dangerous objects than toy magnets. Even a child is allowed to hold a pencil, a deadly object if used in such a way.
Ron Light	kansas City, MO	2013-11-07	This is an unfair and disproportionate reaction to the risk of this product.
Anton Olsen	Greenville, TX	2013-11-16	Magnets are a great adult toy, an educational tool, and an artistic medium.

John Kelly	Oklahoma City, OK	2013-11-16	Putting this much effort to ban a simple product because of the possibility of injury is ridiculous. Especially when you take into account the number of children injured or killed by guns in this country, yet there is almost zero regulation of firearms.
Brian McLaughlin	Odenton, MD	2013-11-16	Magnets in all shapes and sizes are important educational tools and just damn fun.
Robert Leyland	Novato, CA	2013-11-16	Kids education and learning. Magnets are at the core of many advanced technologies, and the US needs people that understand magnets at a very fundamental level.

Spencer Larson	Escondido, CA	2013-11-19	balloons kill way more kids than magnets do, so why not ban balloons instead?
Jamie Nichols	columbus, OH	2013-11-20	Prime example of overreaction. Rather than working to set standards to minimize harm, it's outright banned, in spite of very little actual harm. I can buy a crate of shotgun shells without any impediment, but FSM forbid I buy magnets or cold medicine.
Dan Hallock	Bellingham, WA	2013-11-21	A warning label is probably appropriate. but there's no reason for a ban. Magnets are a great learning tool. This is an overreaction that I have never understood.
angel sanchez	Orlando, FL	2013-11-24	this is important because they are a great way of teaching and distraction and it wuld be realy bad if our future generation cannot enjoy it

German Guzman	Torrance, CA	2013-12-07	Zen is good for your body and your soul. It's like music therapy and stimulates creativity, happiness, and not a mindless, made up traffic sign imposed on humans constitutional liberty of expressions thru all our ninth senses and which is our artful ways of projecting, and visualization of our gift from the enlightened spectrum from the Creator, the Sun of life. Banning Zen is like putting our spark of life in bondage and make people as slaves to mindless textual concentration camp of boredom and death to humanities endeavor to be creative which is the expression of love.
German Guzman	Torrance, CA	2013-12-07	This zen ban is really dumb. Zen will open our time and space to our next expression of elevation to the multi-dimensional upgrade of our passion to the next level of realm. Textual prohibition is totally two dimensional words that belongs on a piece of paper and is a mean to shackle our constitutional freedom and love for life. This ban is a hate crime, harassment, slavery of our entire universe of expanding consciousness. Zen is part of the magnetic wave patterns, oscillation, and harmonic beat of our heart which the Creator has given us for free without conditions, and restrictions. This gift is our covenant of love from God. This ban is as evil as hate and a malicious intention to divide us all and suppress our intelligence for freedom and pursuit of happiness.

fendell pillsbury	sarasota, FL	2013-12-12	I love Magnets, my sons love them and they are a wonderful tool for the imagination and scientific exploration. Do not Ban fun.
Dan Adams	Shoreline, WA	2013-12-17	This is blatant governmental overreach. These magnets are completely safe when used as directed, and the packages already warn against letting children access them. The CPSC has really stepped in it this time, and it's sad that they don't see a face-saving way to walk this back. Instead, they'll use the full power of the federal government to try to crush any company that will not bend to their will.
Sean Burke	Dayton, VA	2013-12-18	Magnets ore awesome
Alyssa Augustine	Asheville, NC	2013-12-18	I believe i have the right to make my OWN decisions about what I will purchase and what I won't. I should be provided with the information about the product and am responsible for my OWN safety. As usual the gov't continues to overstep their bounds where they shouldn't and not intervene where they should (hint, hint, GMO LABELING!!)
Heath Robinson	San Francisco, CA	2013-12-23	Because magnet spheres are being viewed as if they were a toy, when most companies aren't selling them as such. They are actually less dangerous than many toys that most households have.
Paul Flanagan	Chester, NJ	2013-12-25	Because, like, magnets, how do they work?
Rick Massumi	Washington, DC	2014-01-13	This is a horrific example of overreach to solve a problem of such minor significance as to reach pure absurdity. Down with your Nanny State.
Stephen Lukasik	Dearborn, MI	2014-01-26	There are so many other things that the CPSC could be spending their time and money on besides banning magnets!
jacob thompson	moundville, AL	2014-01-31	becuase i love this magents
ben fox	dayton, TN	2014-02-03	Because they are extremely fun to play with and if they ban them I will be mad and bored
Cody Henry	West Haven, CT	2014-02-09	I have become obsessed with my first set of Zen Magnets over a year ago and the became a toy that allowed my to express my creativity, keep my nerves down and became something that i just liked to squeeze and play with while i'm studying or watching TV. And if these magnetic balls were removed because they have the POTENTIAL to kill someone, then other teen wont be able to have such a toy to use and keep their overactive mind at ease, And if these magnets are banned why not ban the slipNslide. the easy bake oven, All toy guns, or any other toy that can POTENTIALLY. I hope that my favorite toy can stick around longer than i can.
Justin McGranahan	Sharon, PA	2014-02-14	There is no reason that these magnets should be banned.
