The Inchcape representatives discussed the history of Inchcape, its testing facilities and procedures.

Chairman Brown raised several items for discussion specifically how CPSC could learn about potentially hazardous products in the marketplace that are tested by testing laboratories such as Inchcape, UL, and others. The participants discussed establishing some type of code of good practices for testing and certification agencies whereby all testing organizations would agree to provide information to the Commission if they identify a potentially hazardous product that is in the marketplace. Inchcape agreed to develop a first draft of such a "code."

The Inchcape representatives expressed the desire to work with the Commission to help advance product safety.
