This meeting focused on safety training for flammable refrigerants.

The group spent time brainstorming what the target audience for the training should be. The group considered everyone across the value stream including producers, installers, distributors, first responders, maintenance personnel, users/consumers, regulators, authorities having jurisdiction, designers, engineers, those responsible for end-of-life disposal, and others. These various stakeholders were added to the task group charter.

The group discussed some work performed by a training consultant since the last teleconference. The group reviewed the work including possible training content designs, audience needs analysis, current state analysis, and a gap analysis. The group also reviewed the training content development, including subject matter expert participation, approach, modality, overall design, and delivery. Concerns were raised over copyright and trademark infringement in the development of training. The group also discussed training of trainers.

AHRI shared a presentation on materials of flammability properties and decomposition products.

The next teleconferences are scheduled for July 15 and July 19 and may continue weekly or biweekly for a few months.
